Cuba Cabinet Resignations Given as Grau Meets Rebels

Government Totters as Bombs Blast in Capital.

One Dead, 5 Hurt In 9th Explosion

Mendieta, Nationalist Chief, Demands New Regime.

Havana, Nov. 3 (AP).—With the written resignation of his entire cabinet in his pocket, President Ramon Grau San Martin left the palace shortly after 11 o'clock tonight for the residence of Sergio Carbo, where he was to meet representatives of Cuba's revolutionary factions.

The cabinet and the student directory, his chief supporters, met in separate sessions tonight to discuss the political situation, while the student directory continued. After the meeting tonight, Grau was expected to return to the palace and meet the cabinet again.

Would Turn to Left.
A member of the cabinet told newspapermen the secretaries' resignations had not yet been accepted but "I am quitting anyway unless the government turns sharply to the left."

The Nationalist leader, Carlos Mendieta, also conducted a conference with his followers and afterwards announced he was determined not to accept a proposal that he become executive.

He and his followers, Mendieta said, "are asking that President Grau San Martin resign," adding that "it is not a question of cabinet portfolios nor jobs nor representation in the government, but that President Grau lacks the force of public opinion necessary to govern Cuba."

Woodin Sued For Gold Coins

Court Orders Secretary to Show Cause for Treasury Refusal.

Secretary Woodin was directed yesterday by Justice F. D. Letts, District Supreme Court, to show cause by November 15 why he should not be placed under court order requiring him to redeem in gold a $30 gold certificate.

The suit was filed Thursday by Halsey K. Davis, New York City. Davis complained that on October 25, when he presented the certificate at the Treasury and demanded gold, he was informed President Roosevelt had forbidden such payments.

Davis contended this refusal was unconstitutional and asked the court to issue a mandamus compelling Secretary Woodin to give him gold.

Te petition recited that Davis was informed the banking act of March 3 formed the basis for noncompliance with the terms on the face of his certificate. Fate of the anti-gold hoarding proclamation rests upon the outcome of the hearing, it is contended.

District-to-Gotham Plane Record Set

30-Minute Hop from Here at 260 Miles Per Hour.

New York, Nov. 3 (AP).—An unofficial air speed record of 50 minutes from Washington to New York was set yesterday by Jimmy Wedell, of Patterson, La.

Flying his own plane, Miss Patterson, named for his home town, Wedell reached Roosevelt Field at 4:30 p. m. He had flown at 260 miles an hour, cruising speed. He was not trying for a record.

"I didn't realize I was going so fast," he said. "I'm going to do it over and make it in 40 minutes."

Spanish State Prisoner Flees to Gibraltar

Madrid, Nov. 3 (AP).—Juan March, Spanish millionaire who escaped from prison last night because a prison guard chief was "sorry for him," was learned tonight to have slipped past the customs into Gibraltar.

March has been in jail two years since banishment from the Spanish Chamber of Deputies on charges of irregularities in connection with his great tobacco monopoly in Morocco.

Tobacco Heir, Wife Foil Extortion Plot

MRS. R. J. REYNOLDS, Jr., of Winston-Salem, N. C., wife of heir to tobacco millions, threatened with kidnapping in letters sent husband (inset).

Winston-Salem, N. C., Nov. 3 (AP).—A crudely planned plot to extort $10,000 from R. J. "Dick" Reynolds, Jr., Winston-Salem sportsman and heir to tobacco millions, ended tonight in a kidnapping plot.

The 25-year-old wife ended today in the arrest of John Lanier, 35, an unemployed textile worker, and his wife, Nannie, 30.

Lanier was arrested as he picked up a dummy package left by officers at a spot where two notes, sent to Reynolds, directed the $10,000 be placed. Mrs. Lanier was taken into custody at her home and taken to police headquarters for questioning, but no charges were lodged against her.

Officers said Lanier denied for several hours that he wrote the notes to Reynolds and maintained a spot where two notes, sent to Reynolds, directed the $10,000 be placed.

Federal Pay Rise Hinted By Roosevelt

Reveals He Is in Touch With Living Costs Survey Here.

The possibility that President Roosevelt will restore a portion or all of the 15 per cent Government pay cut on January 1 was reported yesterday in high governmental circles.

The President made known at his biweekly press conference that he has kept in touch with the cost of living index under compilation by the Labor Department for several months and that Secretary Perkins has been working diligently on the statistics.

Observers attached significance to the fact that the President apparently has found time to inquire about progress of the Labor Department survey instead of dismissing the matter from his mind until completion of the figures, as well as a supplemental report, expected the latter part of next month.

While Congress ordinarily retains exclusive jurisdiction over Federal salaries, the economy act passed at the last session specifically delegated to the President authority to restore any or all of the 15 per cent cut on the basis of cost of living statistics to be compiled by a governmental agency.

The law provided the President may change the Federal pay within the 15 per cent cut range—on the basis of comparative figures for six-month periods ending July 1 and January 1. Experts explained the Chief Executive could take such action only if the index showed cost of living on the date named to be equal to or greater than the level existing in 1928.

It also has been suggested that the President merely make known his views on whether the wage reduction should be restored and permit actual restoration, if any, to result from Congressional action.

Spokesmen for the workers predicted the Labor Department survey would disclose present expenses for rent, food and other important items equal or exceed those existing here in 1928.

Engine Picks Power From Air, Hits 125 M.P.H., Says Inventor

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 3 (AP).—An engine designed to derive power from compressed air that is replenished as it runs, and to develop a speed of 125 miles an hour, is nearing completion here. It is a railroad model, but its inventor, William E. Boyette, said he has demonstrated the success of the engine in an automobile.

In outlining revolutionary changes in transportation systems he said he hoped the engine would develop. Boyette declared he had been threatened "in every conceivable manner, including lunacy proceedings," if he proceeded with the experiment.

The engine is expected to be ready for a test run at Jacksonville, Fla., by November 15. The inventor said he hopes to make the run with a minimum expenditure of $248.

Patents were secured on April 18, 1933, Boyette said, on the showing made by the automobile model. The model now nearing completion is a steel chassis approximately 40 feet long with three sets of railroad wheels. It resembles a huge bus mounted on railroad wheels with all of the body removed except the front cab.

The main power is derived from the front compressor directly connected with the wheels. Power for the auxiliary compressor will be furnished by an electric motor connected to a 675-ampere battery. The generator, 110 volts, 210 amperes, is driven by the three sets of wheels, recharging the battery while in motion.

Open Fight On Gold Plan Of President Is Organized

"Sound Money League" to Combat Inflation Rooted in West.

Farmer Faction Sees Dollar Peril

Administration Faces Split of Leaders on Price Policy.

By Elliott Thurston.
A "Sound Money League," to combat the currency inflationists, the energetic committee for the Nation and the so-called rubber-dollar enthusiasts, headed by Prof. George F. Warren, of Cornell, is taking root in the West.

The growing influence of the inflationists upon the White House, President Roosevelt's experimentation with gold-price manipulation at home and abroad, and the absence of organized, vocal opposition representing sound-money advocates, irrespective of political labels, have combined to start a movement which promises to assume large economic and political importance.

A first echo of the movement came day before yesterday from a group of Middle Western economists, who joined in a statement, issued through Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, assailing the gold-price experimentation and warning against the experiments promoted by such groups as the committee for the Nation.

New York Opposition.
A second echo came yesterday from the New York State Chamber of Commerce, which went on record against the rubber or commodity dollar, and called for prompt return of the country to a gold standard. This was one of the first open organized attacks on the Roosevelt Administration's latest ventures in gold price fixing as a device to lift commodity prices.

During the chamber's debate, Lester F. Lore, head of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad, waved a $20 note in his hand and said, "That is a mere scrap of paper. There has been a violation of the Government's pledge to pay in gold, just as surely as Germany violated its treaty with Belgium."

Further echoes are to be heard from now on, coincident with the contemplated formation of a nationwide organization dedicated to sound currency policy and embracing in its membership leaders of both the major political parties, economists, business and industrial heads, and others who would banish existing uncertainty over the dollar and return to paths of monetary orthodoxy.

Meanwhile the Administration is going ahead full steam with its domestic gold price raising and purchases abroad which are being conducted under a cover of secrecy.

2 Die in Crash Of Army Plane

Lieut. Hunting, of Langley Field, and Sergeant Burned in Craft.

Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 3 (AP).—Two men were killed tonight when an Army plane burst into flames in midair and crashed into a wooded section 4 miles from Harrisburg.

The victims, according to officials at the Middletown Army Air Depot, were Lieut. Lawrence C. Hunting, of Langley Field, Va., and Staff Sgt. John J. Cunningham, Rockwell Field, San Diego, Calif. Lieut. Hunting was piloting.

Persons who saw the plane in flames a few minutes after it had left the Middleton depot notified authorities. The wreckage was discovered by dropping flares from an other plane.

The craft burned and bodies of the two men were charred beyond identification.

Bankrupt Banker Hits Two Texas Oil Wells

East St. Louis, Ill., Nov. 3 (AP).—"Black gold" will be used by E. R. Hagler, former president of the closed First National Bank of Mascoutah, Ill., to pay $500,000 debts.

Two oil wells have been struck on Texas land owned by the banker. Hagler filed a petition last May asking a five-year extension in which to pay the debts.

Daniels Negotiates Mexico Debt Payment

Mexico City, Nov. 3 (AP).—Ambassador Daniels conferred for an hour late yesterday with Acting Foreign Minister Jimenez Dominguez, apparently in connection with negotiations for a lump-sum settlement of all Mexico-United States claims, expected an agreement will be reached before the end of the year.

Governors, Rebuffed by Wallace, Take Farm Plea to President; Executive Plans to Keep NRA

Consumers' Unit Insists U. S. Keep Authority Over Industry.

Roosevelt Plans No Change Now

Held Doubtful of U. S. Industry's Ability for Fair Deal to All.

With President Roosevelt represented as determined to make permanent the principles involved in the NRA, controversy over the Swope plan of business self-government last night brought forth a statement from the Consumers' Advisory Board insisting that the Government must remain "in a fully authoritative position."

The Advisory Board set up a committee to study the Swope plan, which already has drawn the fire of labor representatives, and agreed that there must be recognition that three parties compose industry—consumer, labor and management—and that none should be permitted to dominate the others.

The President was said to believe the Swope plan an interesting theoretical contribution to the welter of such plans that might be expected as the social and economic experiment of the NRA advances another step. It was learned authoritatively, however, that he contemplates no change for the present in the Recovery Administration—not at least for some months.

Doubts Fairness.
Discussion of the ultimate development of the NRA, such as the Swope plan, he welcomes as wholesome. However, he is believed to be dubious of the capacity of business conducting itself on NRA principles with absolute fairness for all, at the present time.

Gerard Swope, chairman of the Business Advisory Council of the Department of Commerce, visited the White House before leaving for New York, but he told newspapermen he had nothing to add to his proposed Thursday speech, in which he advocated that "code authorities be drawn under a 'National Chamber of Commerce and Industry' with the Government represented."

Ultimately, the President believes, the Recovery Administration will develop into a system of permanent nature, which will have for its object the prevention of violent economic swings and too great a spread between the prosperous few and the suffering many.

Johnson Indorses Plan.
While Mr. Swope did not wish to comment, it is understood his plan was proposed for long-range execution after the immediate codification of business has been completed by the NRA. Despite varying interpretations, the plan itself has been endorsed by Gen. Johnson with assurance that under it the Government would lose none of its participation.

In its discussion of the Swope plan the Consumers' Advisory Board was sharply critical of business management. A statement said: "In agreeing upon the general requirements to be met in an adequate plan for industrial control, the board was guided in part by the well-known fact that very frequently, when given a dominant control of industry, the management-ownership group has failed to protect successfully not only the interests of the other parties in industry, but its own interests."

Examples were cited not only from the pre-depression economic conditions but from the present.

Wisconsin Troop Call Is Held Off

Governor Waits on Session With President Today.

Despite growing sentiment in Wisconsin for immediate mobilization of the National Guard to end the farmers' strike and prevent further violence and destruction of property, Gov. A. G. Schedeman, in Washington with four other Midwestern governors seeking to have the Administration fix prices for farm commodities, declared last night he would not consider issuing a mobilization order until after the governors' conference with President Roosevelt today.

Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Wisconsin executive council, telephoned Gov. Schedeman and reported growing demand for immediate mobilization of troops. Crowley reported destruction of two additional cheese factories at Shawano yesterday and said the strike was spreading and violence becoming greater.

Weather Barks Settle In Stratosphere Flight

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—The projected balloon ascension of Lieut. Comdr. T. G. W. Settle, U. S. N., and his aid, Maj. Chester Fordney, U. S. M. C., into the stratosphere on a scientific expedition was postponed again tonight because of unfavorable weather conditions.

NRA Heads 'Amazed' At Layoffs by Ford

Detroit Claims Loss of Time Demanded Under Law.

Recovery officials last night were amazed to hear that Henry Ford intended laying off all his men seven days to come within the 35-hour average work week permitted by the automobile code and indicated that this action was regarded as a definite violation of the spirit of the industrial law if not of the letter of the code.

Pending more complete information as to the Ford plans Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and his aids declined to comment. It was pointed out, however, permission to work the men as high as 48 hours a week was placed in the code to take care of extraordinary peaks of business and the 35-hour average was intended to be the

Capital, Labor Rule for Italy II Duce's Plan

Delegates From Various Groups Will Succeed Old Parliament.

(Copyright, 1933, by the United Press.)

Rome, Nov. 3 (AP).—Premier Mussolini, who rejuvenated Italy after the World War under Fascism, is now prepared to proceed with the second step in his bold experiment in remolding the nation into the conception of the "corporate state," the United Press learned today.

He intends to revolutionize the Parliament. The new legislative assembly of government in Italy will consist of delegates from trade, agriculture and industry groups, or "guilds," throughout the country. The present Parliament will be dissolved after the Christmas holidays.

Mussolini's project calls for a system under which legislative powers will be granted both capital and labor in an effort to give them full control over production as well as government.

Action Sets Precedent.
The action, unheard of in modern political economy, virtually eliminates the Chamber of Deputies as it is now constituted and elected by the people at large. In its stead, representatives of industry, trade and agriculture will be chosen by their own groups and sent to Parliament. The result will be a sort of national council of commerce and agriculture, combined, with full legislative powers.

In Rome political observers considered the program the most drastic constitutional move in modern times. It approached the technocracy conception, with the difference that the Senate will retain a measure of political legislative control.

The new legislative body's delegates will be sent from groups classified and grouped in 50 industrial categories, called "category guilds," representing both labor and capital. These delegates will form a general body, or chamber, controlling production, the regulation of trade and the organization of the entire industrial, commercial and agricultural activity of Italy.

Planned for Months.
The project has been in formation by Mussolini and his chief Fascist aids for some months. As long ago as 1930 the National Guild Council was inaugurated. It consisted of "ex officio" members, sitting with representatives of the 18 general confederations of the occupational unions of employers and employees in the 7 main branches of production.

These seven branches were recognized as such by the syndical law and are agriculture, industry, commerce, credit and insurance, inland communications, sea and air transport and the arts and professions.

President Roosevelt authorized the fleet yesterday to return to the Atlantic next summer for what is described as "a few months' visit." It will be the first time the entire fleet has been sent in East Coast waters since May, 1930, when former President Hoover reviewed the combined forces of what was then called the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets off the Virginia Capes.

Since March, 1932, the scouting force, formerly the Atlantic Fleet, has been with the battle division on the West Coast.

The presence of virtually all the Nation's seagoing fighting strength in the Pacific has been a major irritant to Tokyo.

When the Atlantic Squadron was ordered to California waters a year and a half ago it was officially stated that the purpose was solely to carry out war games planned long in advance.

It was said at the White House yesterday afternoon that the purpose of the return to this coast was to give officers and men an opportunity to visit their homes.

In the spring of 1932 the Far Eastern situation was rapidly approaching a high degree of tension. Last September, Koki Hirota, champion of a conciliatory attitude toward Japan's neighbors, was named foreign minister in Tokyo. Observers maintain his appointment represents at least a temporary victory for the civil authority over the military.

Midwesterners to Make Final Appeal for Price Fixing.

A. A. A. Considers High Loan Offer Impracticable.

Prewar Parity Demand of Corn Belt Held Impracticable.

By Franklin W. Wainman, Jr.
Unable to satisfy Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his advisers that their plan for raising farm prices was practicable, governors of five "Middle Western States" last night decided to make a final appeal at 11 a. m. today to President Roosevelt to overrule the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

There was little hope, however, that their proposal would be accepted. The five governors spent the entire day in conference with Mr. Wallace and agricultural experts, seeking to perfect a scheme under which prewar parity prices would be fixed for wheat, corn, hogs, cattle and butterfat. Under their plan this would be carried out by placing all processors and handlers of such foods under licenses and requiring them to pay the specified price.

Mr. Wallace, however, could not be persuaded that such a program could be enforced. He pointed out as an obstacle the large surpluses existing in some of these farm commodities. The governors proposed that the Federal Government step into the market and start buying whenever these surpluses caused the price level to sag. Mr. Wallace held such a plan would be too costly.

A. A. Drafts Loan Plan.

Meanwhile it became known that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is at work on a plan either to advance loans on wheat at a figure higher than the market price or to establish a Government agency for the purpose of buying all wheat offered by farmers.

Under the latter plan, processors and middlemen would be licensed, and required to purchase from the Government agency at a fixed price. Such action would have the effect of relegating the Chicago grain pit into a position of unimportance. This scheme, however, was not beyond the discussion stage.

With the breakdown of the negotiations between the five governors and the Administration's farm authorities, an element of politics entered the picture. It was apparent the governors wish to place all responsibility on the Administration for the impasse. After the meetings ended last night they bluntly announced Secretary Wallace had rejected their plan.

Tiger Disowns Farley After McKee Blast

Chiefs to Read "Big Jim" Out of Tammany Hall for Aiding Foe.

By Frank Getty.
New York, Nov. 3 (Sp.).—An attempt to write Postmaster General James A. Farley out of the Tammany organization, because of his support of Joseph V. McKee, was the high spot of an otherwise uneventful day in the mayoralty campaign.

Tammany chieftains declared today that Farley, by his support of the Recovery party candidate, had alienated himself from the organization.

Farley's announced intention of voting for McKee was taken here as tacit support of the National Administration. The Tammany crowd was exceedingly upset by this, and took prompt steps to disown the Postmaster General.

Tammany Chiefs Meet.
A meeting of Tammany chieftains was held tonight to read "Big Jim" out of the Tammany Hall, despite the fact that he had insisted that in expressing a preference for McKee he was only exercising the right of an ordinary voter.

Speaking for the organization, John H. McCooey, Brooklyn leader, said Farley's statement "would not affect the O'Brien vote except to increase it."

"It will bring resentment among regular Democrats against any Presidential interference in a city election, and especially will Democrats resent this stand by the National chieftains," he added.

Farley's declaration for McKee, coupled with that of Prof. Raymond Moley, were regarded here as having increased the chances of the recovery party candidate one hundredfold.

Whereas Florio LaGuardia had been leading in everyone's poll until today, the Farley statement, carrying with it the inevitable implications, seemed to make McKee's chances better.

Voters Sensitive.
Prof. Moley's insistence that defeat of McKee would be accepted generally as a reflection on President Roosevelt's Administration, also had its effect here. The average New York City voter is unusually sensitive to this kind of thing.

The possibility that the New York City election might have an effect upon the national organization of the Democratic Party was, however, the most important of the day's developments.

In Tammany circles, it was stated that Farley, by his announced intention to vote for McKee, had cut himself off from any organization support. "Big Jim" and any of his candidates, must, from now on, get along without Tammany help.

President to Keep NRA in Operation

history of the country, such as those offered by the disastrous experiment in copper price-fixing, but also more recent cases of manipulation, anticipating broad price-fixing powers under NRA codes, have boosted prices to levels harmful to themselves, consumers, and general economic recovery.

The board agreed that where the management-ownership system is relieved of competition, the other parties to industry—labor and consumer—must be equally strengthened. It suggested its committee satisfy itself on a number of points of consumer protection, including "should provision be made to guard against the tendency that organized industry may become dominant over the Government?"

In the absence of President William Green, the American Federation of Labor has taken no official stand on the Swope plan, but it has been criticized by many labor leaders. An attack from another quarter was also made by Robert L. Lund, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, who contends trade bodies cannot be grouped together in any such plan effectively.

The consumers' board committee, named by Mrs. Mary H. Rumsey, chairman, will confer with a similar committee of the business advisory council. Members of the consumers' committee are Dr. Walton Hale Hamilton, of Yale law school; Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina; Miss Belle Sherwin, president of the League of Women Voters; Grace Morrison Poole, president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. Paul H. Douglas, University of Chicago; Dexter M. Keezer, director of the board, and Dr. Gardner C. Means, economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The business advisory committee also is to meet with another committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to investigate the Swope plan. Members of the latter body are to be named by Henry I. Harriman, president, now out of the city.

New Diving Record Is Set at 260 Feet

San Francisco, Nov. 3 (AP).—A new United States record for individual deep-sea diving was claimed here today by Christ Hansen, who said he had gone 260 feet below the surface of the water in a successful effort to recover a 10,000-pound anchor being used on construction of the Golden Gate Bridge here.

Hansen, who said he had experienced a pressure of 120 pounds to the square inch at that depth, refused treatment in a "decompression chamber." He used an ordinary flexible diving suit with air-pressure tubes.

Associates of Hansen said the previous record of 240 feet was claimed by William Reed, of San Francisco.

Expert Studies "Technocratic" Drift of Duce

Howard Scott Not Ready to Classify Premier on Data at Hand.

Howard Scott, director of technocracy, has written the following article commenting upon technocratic aspects of Premier Mussolini's proposed reorganization of the Fascist Italian state.

By Howard Scott, Director of Technocracy. Written for the United Press. (Copyright, 1933, by the United Press.)
New York, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—The significance of the news from Rome is not yet apparent to the political leaders of this country and Europe. Mussolini again has demonstrated his vision in initiating the first national move away from the old traditional structures in the management of human affairs; but to say Mussolini is a technocrat, according to information from Rome, is premature.

Italy, under Fascism, is operating that economic area under a price-system method of social control. The Italian price system under Fascist direction still attempts to control its production and consumption both internally and externally on a scarcity economy basis, using a commodity valuation currency as a rectifying regulator of the Italian economy.

Limitation Recognized.
The commodity valuation units of Italy are as unrelated to the Italian rate of production as the dollar here is to the American.

Italian industry and agriculture are today running at but a small fraction of what is technically possible for that area even in spite of the vigorous discipline and efficiency introduced by the Fascist regime.

It could not be otherwise under a price system. The issue would appear that Mussolini in his endeavor to raise the standard of livelihood recognizes only too well the limitations imposed upon his direction by the price system. The significance to the European and American political structures of today's reported move by Mussolini, is that Mussolini has taken the first step in a campaign the future move of which will evolve all western Europe.

Possibilities Told.
However, if all of the physical equipment of Italian industry were operated at continuous full load, and Italian agriculture were completely industrialized, and the whole Italian area operated at this capacity under the present Fascist efficiency, but free from the limitations of the price system, Italy would enjoy a standard of livelihood several times higher than is at present possible.

Italian foreign trade would cease to exist in the sense we now know it, as is foreign commercial enterprise for a price and a profit. The continuous full load operation of Italian industry and agriculture would produce such a volume of goods and services in excess of the Italian needs that they could be exchanged abroad on a barter basis.

Liquor Tax Data Asked for Inquiry

Senator Harrison Plans Talk With Experts.

Treasury data on domestic and imported liquor taxation has been asked by Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, preparatory to a Senate Finance Committee study of the whole tax question, it was disclosed last night by Senator Harrison, chairman of the committee.

Pending completion of a study by experts, he declined to comment on proposed changes in liquor taxes following repeal of the eighteenth amendment. He will confer with experts early next week, he said.

The House Ways and Means Subcommittee, which has been studying general tax revision all summer, temporarily has passed over the liquor tax phase to consider stopping gaps in existing income tax legislation.

Sarraut Wins Chamber Vote Of Confidence

Action Clears Premier's Path for Hard Task of Balancing Budget.

Paris, Nov. 3 (AP).—The young government of Premier Albert Sarraut won its first victory tonight in the Chamber of Deputies, gaining a 320-to-32 vote of confidence in its program of "sound finances."

The issues leading to a vote of confidence today were virtually the same as those which caused the recent downfall of the cabinet of Premier Daladier.

The vote leaves Sarraut a clear path in tackling the terrific task of balancing the budget.

Averse to precipitating another ministerial crisis, fearing the effects on the French franc and the gold supply in the Bank of France, the deputies voted to give the new premier a chance to produce economic restoration.

Despite the apparent size of the government majority, the cabinet got only 12 votes over a clear majority in the chamber, there being more than 200 who abstained from voting. The latter included the Socialists and the group surrounding former Premier Andre Tardieu, who are waiting for specific bills from the government.

Many of the deputies predicted tonight that, despite today's vote, the government is facing a hard fight.

The premier declared he would stake the life of his ministry on financial proposals which he intends to present fully in a few days.

Although the first reception to the ministerial program was apparently cool, the premier made a last-minute energetic appeal for support to the specific proposals.

He surprised his friends with the force of his oratory.

C. of C. Votes Carrier Plan

Program of 17 Changes in Transportation Setup Adopted.

Seventeen objectives for fairer and more economic competitive conditions among rail, water and highway carriers today had been combined into a program sponsored by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

A referendum vote by the chamber membership approved the campaign. Voters agreed on all items on the program except regulation of maximum size and weight of motor vehicles.

Most important of the objectives sought are:

- Restricting of gasoline tax levies to States.
- A special user tax for trucks, reflecting fairly the demands they make upon highways.

Reasonable limitation of hours of service of commercial vehicle operators on the highways.

Abandonment of Government operation of commercial water transportation.

Water and rail rates to competitive points that are adequately compensatory to the carriers making the rates.

Navy Tests Robot Diving Bell Capable Of Carrying Rescuers to Depth of 1,500 Feet

Seattle, Nov. 3 (AP).—The U. S. Navy has completed preliminary tests of a robot diving bell, represented today as able to plunge into the ocean, pick up a dome or a 25-foot locomotive crane, and carry workers into depths heretofore beyond their reach in salvaging stricken submarines and saving lives.

The pear-shaped, two-armed contrivance, invented by E. J. Romano, of Seattle, is radically different in dimensions, outlines, grasping hooks and lights from ordinary diving apparatus and the heavy machine used on the Italian gold-salvaging ship Artiglio.

Ralph S. Fleming, vice president in charge of operations of the salvage company operating the robot off Puget Sound, said today it has been manipulated more than 850 feet under water, and tested to withstand pressure deeper than 1,500 feet, in contrast to the 100-foot operations of average divers in old-style equipment.

Navy tests were made by Commander H. E. Saunders, of the battle force; Lieut. Comdr. Henry Hartley, submarine diving expert and commander of the robot.

The substance of their report as transmitted to the Navy Department in Washington was kept secret.

"We are not interested in the commercial end of this venture," said Commander Saunders, "but in the humanitarian end of it—that is, the saving of lives by its use."

Saunders helped to raise the submarine S-51, which sank off the coast of New England.

Round-World Airmail Route Discussed Here

Dirigible Line Is Proposed As Washington, Paris Link in Plan.

Washington as the possible point of departure for a round-the-world airmail route was the subject of a conference between a director of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation, of Akron, Ohio, and authorities of the Navy Department's hydrographic office, it was announced yesterday.

The proposed route would connect Washington and Paris by dirigible, and fast land planes cooperating with dirigibles would convey the mail over shorter distances.

Naval officials were advised that the United States and Germany would cooperate in launching this enterprise, and that headquarters likely would be in Akron. Two-way service around the world would be maintained, according to tentative plans, and officials learned a dirigible is being built in Germany for the route.

With favorable mail contracts from American postoffice authorities, the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation believes it could have four dirigibles in service in a year or so, carrying passengers as well as valuable express matter.

Woman Ends Life By Inhaling Gas

Husband Finds Wife Who Had Been Ill Dead.

Apparently despondent over ill health, Mrs. Bessie Doyle, wife of Burton W. Doyle, proprietor of the Doyle Printing Service, killed herself by inhaling gas last night in the kitchen of her home.

Doyle, upon returning home shortly after 9 o'clock, found the kitchen door and windows sealed with paper and noted the odor of gas. He called police, who vainly sought to revive her. Dr. John A. Logan pronounced her dead.

Mrs. Doyle was 38. They had no children.

Herndon Resident Injured by Truck

John Hall, 78, in Hospital With Ribs Crushed.

John Hall, 78, of Herndon, Va., was injured seriously yesterday when struck by a truck near his home.

According to witnesses, Hall stepped from behind a parked car into the path of a truck owned by J. C. Rogers, of Herndon, and driven by a colored employee.

He was given first-aid treatment by Dr. E. C. Shull, of Herndon, for crushed chest and broken ribs, and then taken to George Washington Hospital.

Pinchot Pleaded

Milford, Pa., Nov. 3 (AP).—Gov. Pinchot said tonight he hoped "the chiseling of the Steel Trust will stop" as the result of that understanding reached at Washington for miners to return to work in captive mines of Pennsylvania.

"I am greatly pleased that the miners are going back to work on the President's assurance that they will have a square deal," the governor said at his home.

"On that basis I hope the chiseling of the Steel Trust will stop. The men are doing the right thing and have been doing so. The Steel Trust ought to imitate them."

Socialists See Fascism, Demand Johnson Quit

Philadelphia, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—Resignation of Gen. Hugh Johnson as NRA administrator was demanded by Philadelphia in a telegram to President Roosevelt.

"Gen. Johnson," the telegram said "through his approval of the Swope plan has confirmed our long-held suspicions that the NRA was entirely an astute device to quiet the demands of labor while the ground work for the Fascist state was being laid."

Sound Money League Plans Open Battle on Gold Policy

through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. New York banks are acting as the intermediaries, through their foreign branches, as the Administration can not order reserve banks to buy gold, and they have no authority to do so. For the ninth successive day an increased price for newly-mined domestic gold was fixed yesterday at the Treasury, this time at $32.57 an ounce, 21 cents above the preceding day.

While all signs point to a moderation of the originally declared Administration program so as to avoid currency warfare with the British and French and other foreign governments, the White House repeated yesterday that the gold buying is to go on with the idea that it will raise all other prices.

As for the secrecy, the President said that the Bank of England covers the operation of its celebrated equalization fund behind a cloak of impenetrable privacy. With regard to explaining how the gold price manipulations can raise world prices, however, the White House refers inquirers to Chairman Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who, in turn, demurs that the subject is for the economists to expound. Prof. Warren, however, who is the chief mentor of the present policy, declines to be interviewed. Hence official illumination on the gold operations is scant.

Opposition from Farmers.
Farm bloc leaders who have been won over to the committee of the Nation in its unremitting crusade for inflation are beginning to be confronted now with their disorganizing counterparts from the agrarian sectors. The dozen western economists who joined in the first concerted counter-attack have numerous adherents among the organized agriculturists who dispute the idea that currency inflation will aid the farmer.

So far the dissenting voices have been drowned out in the inflationists' well organized chorus. Hence the formation of an opposition group, as foreshadowed in the joint statement of the dozen western economists who are:

James Washington Bell, professor of money and banking, Northwestern University; Garfield V. Cox, professor of finance, University of Chicago; F. S. Diebler, professor of economics, University of Chicago; Harry D. Giese, professor of economics, University of Chicago; Ralph E. Hellman, professor of economics and dean of the School of Commerce, Northwestern University; William H. Kieffer, professor of economics, University of Wisconsin; H. A. Miller, chairman, department of economics, University of Chicago; Horace Secrist, professor of economics, Northwestern University; Samuel H. Nerlove, assistant professor of business economics, University of Chicago; J. Leo Scharfman, professor of economics, University of Michigan; A. B. Wolfe, professor of economics, Ohio State University; and Ivan Wright, professor of money and banking, University of Illinois.

"Critical Point in History."
"We have come to a critical point in our monetary history," this group declared. "Proposals for radical experimentation with our currency are being put into operation under the pressure of organized groups promoting the views of individual economists who, whatever their general qualifications may be, do not reflect the opinions of representative professional students in the monetary field. Both time and issue call for a swift and public dissent."

"It is now assumed in Washington that the price of gold and the prices of other commodities move automatically in the same direction and apparently that there is still too much gold in the dollar to get the benefits of a higher price level. The relationship of gold to prices is complicated and indirect."

"It is a sobering thought that the 1928 price level (gold of Prof. Warren and many of the inflationists) was based on a gold dollar of the old weight."

"The high prices of 1928 were not due to a manipulation of the gold weight of the dollar, but were dependent upon a broad use of bank credit. The gold content of the dollar is relatively unimportant in general price restoration when compared with bank credit actively at work. Tinkering with the monetary unit will not remedy deep-seated economic maladjustments."

Says Confidence Necessary.
The statement emphasized that recovery depends upon a confidence which monetary manipulation destroys. "The peril of sheer greenbackism is real and not imaginary," the group declared. It advocated return to "a modernized gold standard," toward recovery, and maintenance of "national credit unimpaired."

Adding another fling at the committee for the Nation, though it was not named, the economists said: "In all these matters the clamor of interested propaganda groups should be resisted and public policy should not discard experience that has proved its worth."

Much the same line was taken by the New York Chamber of Commerce, at a special meeting attended by men prominent in finance and business, in all parts of the country, not merely in "Wall Street." Taking "cognizance of recent financial developments," the chamber, in a resolution, affirmed "its conviction that a gold standard is the most satisfactory monetary system from the standpoint of the American people as a whole," and urged "the utmost promptness toward the restoration of a permanent gold standard in the United States."

A majority, holding that a modernized gold standard is essential, voted down an amendment, proposing return to the old gold standard. "Most of us hope that a return to the historic gold dollar will occur immediately," said Bayard F. Pope, a member of the resolutions committee, "but to commit ourselves to that purpose now would be unwise."

Commodity Dollar Scored.
The resolution specifically scored the commodity dollar as promoted by Prof. Warren, declaring that business recovery demands that "the Administration clearly and unequivocally announce that it will not adopt an automatic commodity dollar, or similar currency experiments, but will adopt a policy directed toward the return of the gold standard."

All these rumblings are being noted at the White House and the President's political advisers are warning him against the risk of an opposition party rising up on the issue of "sound money vs. cheap money." It is no secret that various prominent Administration officials are deeply disturbed over the recent gold policy and that a serious rift in the President's official family—and in Democratic ranks will come unless the Administration turns back to the sound money doctrine enunciated in the Democratic platform.

Farm Strikers Form Military Units to Picket

Four Companies Reported Drilling Bombings Renewed.

Des Moines, Nov. 3 (AP)—Farm strikers tightened their grip on farm-to-market highways in five Midwestern States tonight.

While five governors sought to effect an immediate price lifting program through the Federal Administration, renewed bombings in Wisconsin, fistuffs in Iowa, and violence in other States were reported.

The intensified picketing brought from Congressman F. H. Shoemaker at Minneapolis the assertion that "it may be impossible to quell demonstrations" unless farm prices are raised immediately.

Farm Military Units.
In a telegram to President Roosevelt he said farmers were organizing military units under former service men. Four companies already were training and arming themselves with tear gas bombs in central Minnesota, he charged.

Cremeries at Krakow and Zashow, Wis., were bombed today. Today at Madison farmers and milk-pool members voted to continue their strike.

Twenty miles from Sioux City, Vern McFarland and Ward Libby were beaten by farm pickets, fired upon and forced to turn back.

Strike in Alabama.
Picketing was reported also in South Dakota, the eastern border of Nebraska and Minnesota. Members of the Alabama Dairy League at Birmingham today joined the strike.

Racine, Wis., Nov. 3 (AP)—In a clash with farm strikers in the barn yard of Charles Meyer, near Waterloo, deputy sheriffs today fired shot guns and scattered pickets with tear gas bombs.

Augusta, Ga., Nov. 3 (AP)—Labor leaders and cotton textile mills here, where workers are on strike, announced this afternoon they had reached a basis of settlement, effective Monday.

Leaders were confident workers would accept the plan.

Dr. Roux, Pasteur Aid, Dies in Paris

Formerly Headed Noted Science Institute.

Paris, Nov. 3 (AP)—Dr. Emile Roux, 80, former director of the Pasteur Institute and the last surviving collaborator with Pasteur, died at 5:30 p.m. today.

Dr. Roux had suffered from tuberculosis 40 years, while his colleague, Dr. Albert Calmette, who died October 29, struggled to discover a cure for the disease.

Roux was born December 17, 1853, and led an ascetic life, eating simply and sleeping on a hard camp bed. To the rest of the world he was regarded as a legendary recluse and a hard worker who lived solely on bread and soup. He was director of the Pasteur Institute from 1904 to 1918.

2 Firms May Run British Superliner

Compact Between Cunard, White Star Expected.

London, Nov. 3 (AP)—The great British liner "334," now a steel skeleton on the Clyde, will play the Atlantic under joint control of the Cunard and White Star Lines, according to agreement expected when Parliament assembles next week.

The "334" is intended to be a superliner, costing something like $25,000,000, of 73,000 tons and the largest afloat.

Work was suspended a year ago. Directors of the two lines met here today. Shipping circles heard they will amalgamate by means of a new operating company, but it was learned an "agreement" is under consideration rather than a full merger.

A government loan has been proposed to finish the ship, but the government requires an agreement between the companies.

Ford Lashes NRA By Laying Off Men

The new prohibition against work in this country," a Ford Co. spokesman said.

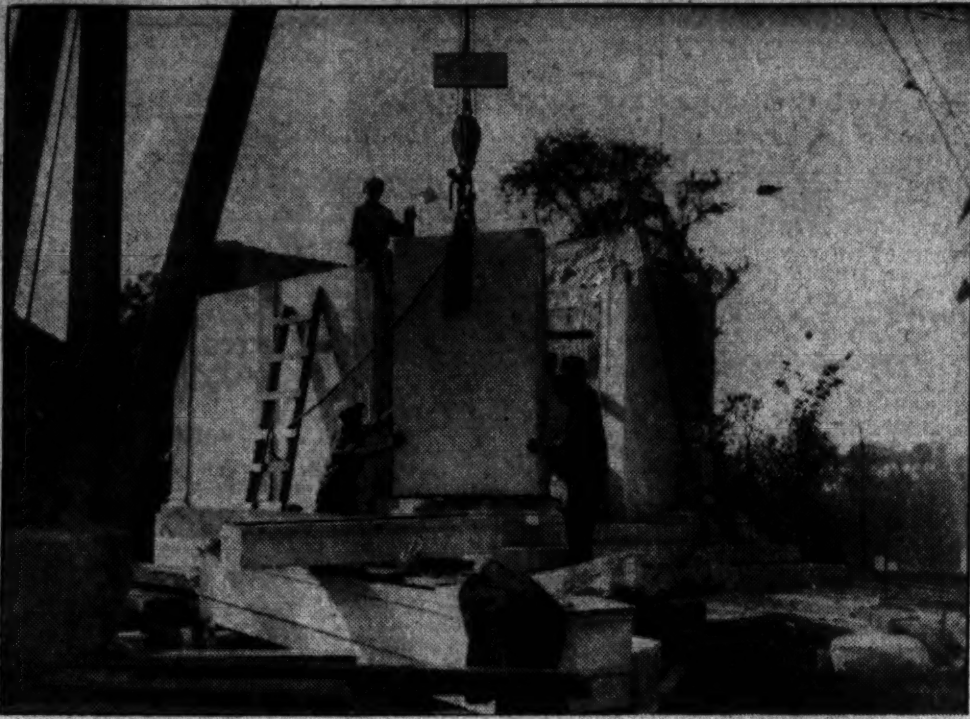

The Rouge plant, employing 45,000, has been maintaining a 40-hour week for the past several months, and officials said the new plan will bring the average working week to 35 hours by the end of the year.

"We don't want to do it, but the law requires it," a company spokesman said.

Edgewater, N. J., Nov. 3 (AP)—Striking Ford workers of the Edgewater assembly plant, about 1,500 strong, dispatched a statement to the Ford office in Detroit today and turned again to Washington for the solution of their problems.

J. Glenn Anderson, of Newark, strikers' attorney, was authorized to "prosecute vigorously charges against the company filed by him in our behalf with the President of the United States."

Wrecking of Dewey Tomb at Arlington Is Begun

A wrecking crew yesterday began demolishing the $35,000 Dewey tomb at Arlington Cemetery, which has been vacant since the body of the hero of Manila Bay was removed to Washington Cathedral several years ago. The mausoleum was sold to a Washington cemetery for a receiving vault.

Johnson Fails To Settle Ford Boycott Issue

Strikers Turn Down Peace; Charging "Despotic Hiring and Firing."

Henry Ford's eligibility to receive Government contracts last night remained in doubt. Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson himself declined to pass on the question.

Gen. Johnson interpreted President Roosevelt's executive order on contracts to provide that bidders must "agree" to abide by NRA requirements. So far the manufacturer has made no such agreement, he said, "although apparently he is complying with the code in full, from all I hear."

The immediate issue is 1,000 trucks needed by the Civilian Conservation Corps. The low bidder, the Northwest Motor Co., Bethesda, Md., which offered 1,000 Fords—has protested to Comptroller General McCarl, but no action has yet been taken.

Gen. Johnson said he could not assume to judge the question, adding that he had nothing to do with the President's order. He said he had been asked whether Ford had "agreed" to comply with his code and could only give a negative answer, which held up the contract.

Meanwhile, Ford strikers at Edgewater, N. J., have rejected the terms of a settlement offered by the Ford company, the United Press reported. While the Ford company has recognized "collective bargaining," the workers charge it has retained "despotic methods of hiring and firing without notice and without ascertainable cause." Discrimination against union members was feared.

The automobile retailers' code went into effect yesterday, carrying with it the possibility of lower prices for new automobiles. NRA officials believed. Their opinion was based principally on provisions regulating allowances for used cars, limiting dealers to their own territory, and prohibiting sales below cost.

The Administration believes the practice of allowing high trade-in allowances in the past has handicapped many dealers, keeping new car prices up. The code itself does not contemplate fixing prices, but provides regulation through the National Automobile Dealers Association.

Ford Rule Amazes Recovery Officials

regular performance in all automobile plants, so that the available work would be shared with the greatest possible number of new employees.

Application of a higher work week as a rule, with long lay-off to bring the total within the 35-hour average, is not regarded by officials as "good faith" compliance with the code.

So far as is known in Washington, no other automobile concern besides Ford has resorted to such a step. It was the expectation at NRA that a more accurate indication of conditions in the Ford plant and the rest of the industry under wage and hour figures required by the code are submitted to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. The Ford figures have been promised by November 6 or 7.

Threat Recalled.

A distinct possibility emerged last night that if the statistics show he has been working his men at a steady higher average than provided by the code without a corresponding rush of production, officials might study whether this did not constitute an actual violation of the code terms. Should they regard it to be the case, it was expected that Johnson would follow his promise of last week and turn over the file on Ford to the Department of Justice.

Filipinos Sail Today To Ask More Liberty

Manila, Nov. 3 (AP)—A mission will start for Washington tomorrow to seek new independence legislation to replace the Hawes-Cutting act, in which Congress offered separate Philippine government in ten years.

The legislature recently rejected the measure.

Tiger Cub, Angry At Salary Probe, Tears Up Code

Los Angeles, Nov. 3 (AP)—In a grouchy mood, Satan, 4-month-old tiger cub, appearing at a hearing today on the domestic and wild animals and equipment rentals industry State code.

He was a delegate from the California Zoological Gardens. "Wages" ranging from $2 to $500 a day for animals already have been written into the code, but animal trainers are at loggerheads with movie studios, principal employers of trained animals, over a demand that they also be paid.

The code provides daily salaries of $100 for elephants, $350 for rhinos, and $500 (yes, $500) for giraffes.

Even skunks are to get $7.50. As for Satan—he will get only $25 a day.

Someone carelessly left a copy of the wild animal code in his reach. He snatched it and tore it up.

Governors in Final Plea to Roosevelt

This statement undoubtedly was made to govern the defeat suffered by the governors and to forestall their declarations on their return home that the Roosevelt Administration had shut the door in their faces.

Nevertheless, it is well known that Secretary Wallace and many of the men making up the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are heartily opposed to the program put forth by the governors. There is a deep-seated hostility in the Agricultural Department to price-fixing, last evidenced by the objections offered to including "stop loss" provisions in the retail store codes.

Apparently President Roosevelt sensed that if he flatly turned down the corn belt governors they would return to their home States with the explanation that they had done the best they could but that the President would not listen to them.

Consequently the President listened sympathetically—for two hours when the governors called Thursday, refrained from committing himself and suggested that the governors meet with Mr. Wallace and other administration officials to formulate a "workable" plan.

Farm Quotas Sought.

Secretary Wallace let the governors state their proposals and then he started to ask questions. Their first plan was to license all the farmers in the corn belt, placing them on quota productions. Another step in the plan was to establish cost of production, plus a reasonable profit level, which in some cases would advance prices well over 100 per cent above existing levels.

Mr. Wallace pointed out to the governors that licensing of producers of agricultural products was without any warrant of legality. He also contended that establishment of cost of production prices was too intricate a plan to be successful, since cost of production varied between sections of the country.

The governors shifted their position, substituting the Administration's goal of prewar parity prices for cost of production and turning the scheme around to license the processors and middlemen and requiring them to pay the established prices. The other end of this scheme would be to get the farmers to agree voluntarily to reduce acreage in accordance with Government formulas designed to bring production into line with domestic consumption.

Holds Plan Too Costly.

Secretary Wallace questioned this second plan on the ground that it was unenforceable and that it failed to take care of surpluses now existing. It was proposed that the Government, through the Federal Relief Corporation or some other agency, keep the market stabilized at the established parity price by making purchases whenever the price level started to slump. It was this part of the plan which Mr. Wallace contended would be too costly.

It is highly doubtful whether the farm governors will have more success at the White House today than they did with Mr. Wallace. The White House attitude is expected to be that it is willing to accept any "workable" plan but that the governors failed to produce such a program. A statement to this effect might be issued.

The reason for this view is that at the White House today, for the first time since President Roosevelt assumed office, there was an intimation that the farmers were asking for too much.

Stock Inquiries May Pool Data For New Laws

Senators Expected to Hold Conferences With President's Group.

Parallel stock market studies by the Senate Banking Committee and the special Commerce Department group acting for the President are expected to culminate in a series of conferences between the two some time this month.

It is intended to discuss corrective legislation, with a view to eliminating abuses uncovered by the Senate committee, substituting a measure of Federal control over run-away speculation.

The Commerce Department group, under Assistant Secretary of Commerce John Dickinson, recently has been strengthened by addition of Federal Trade Commissioner John M. Landis and Henry J. Richardson, Washington attorney.

The group has been holding informal conferences, and a few weeks ago offered the Senate committee its full cooperation.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, whose Senate Banking Committee took a five-day recess Thursday from examination of Chase National Bank and affiliates, meanwhile has been considering possibility of legislative reform of stock and produce exchanges, based on information unearthed.

He hopes a bill can be whipped into shape before Congress returns, although unfinished business of the committee, including investigation of Associated Gas and Electric Co., stock markets throughout the country, and the Cleveland and Detroit closed-bank situation may prolong hearings beyond the January 1 deadline recently set.

Chairman Fletcher would like to see legislation enacted to prevent officials and directors of companies from turning to public disadvantage and personal profit the information they glean from their connections.

He would like to see a measure of Federal supervision over stock exchanges and a general tightening of the securities act.

The House Ways and Means Committee already has availed itself of much of the tax avoidance data uncovered by the Senate committee, and its expected to make recommendations when Congress convenes that will put a stop to tax dodging.

Senate Banking Committee members are expecting a drive by financial interests to modify some particularly requirements that all officials of companies holding stock be equally responsible for the accuracy of statements made to the Federal Trade Commission.

Assignment of Landis to the special Commerce Department committee was regarded as particularly significant, in view of the prospective securities act revision.

Others working with the Dickinson committee are Undersecretary of the Treasury Dean Acheson and A. Berle and Arthur H. Dean, New York attorneys.

Small Deficit Leaves Chicago Deep in Red

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP)—The city will close its fiscal year with a deficit of only $14,000 in its corporate fund, the comptroller informed Mayor Kelly today.

The 1934 budget, however, must absorb a deficit of about $5,500,000 partly for 1933 and partly due to reduction in revenues.

Lindberghs Presented Before World Court

The Hague, Nov. 3 (AP)—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh attended a session of the World Court today and were introduced to President Adachi and the judges by Frank B. Kellogg, former American Secretary of State, who is here for the international tribunal.

Afterwards the Americans were taken on a tour of the Peace Palace.

Woman Held as Spy Hysterical in Prison

Helsingfors, Finland, Nov. 3 (AP)—Mrs. Arvid Jacobson, an American citizen, detained with her husband for alleged espionage activity, was reported tonight to be hysterical in a prison cell.

With nine others, Jacobson and his wife were arrested October 27. Authorities said Jacobson had connections with Russian secret political agents in the United States.

Federal Bank Shift Is Hailed As New Deal

Swifter Relief for Home Owners Seen as Fahey Replaces Stevenson.

Appointment of John H. Fahey, Massachusetts businessman, to succeed William F. Stevenson, former South Carolina Representative, as Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which was announced yesterday at the White House, has been generally hailed as a move toward greater speed and efficiency in relief of distressed home owners.

A change has been urged for several months by Administration advisors, following severe criticism of the slowness with which the board has proceeded in refunding home mortgages.

Stevenson's delay in getting his organization in running order as well as charges of nepotism and party favoritism in his appointments are believed to be the primary reason for President Roosevelt's ready acceptance of the chairman's resignation.

Fahey, who has been head of the finance and bond committee of the board, has been carrying the burden of the work of the board for several months.

Stevenson, who was defeated for reelection to the House in 1932, was appointed chairman of the board in March. He will continue as a member.

Secretary Had Two Jobs.

T. D. Webb, of Tennessee, also a member of the board, was appointed vice chairman. The appointments take effect November 13.

Stevenson, in his letter of resignation, suggested to the President that a satisfactory relief program be introduced in the chairmanship of the board, in accordance with the policy of other emergency boards. He is 73, and pointed out that the duties of chairman were a little arduous for him.

Included in the criticisms of Stevenson was that of his appointment to the two jobs of secretary of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and secretary of the Home Owners Loan Corporation.

Members of his family and friends from South Carolina fill many positions, not only in his own office but also among the posts of State managers of the banks.

When Stevenson first took office he caused a flurry of adverse comment when he announced that he would fill the 12,000 jobs under him only on advice of Postmaster General Farley, without consideration of Civil Service or the merit system.

New Confidence Expected.

Stevenson, because of his tremendous local powers, which he exercised frequently on the House floor, is known as "Steamboat Bill," while his secretary, after he took over two jobs, acquired the title "Two-Job Hutch."

The work of the board in floating a $2,000,000,000 bond issue at 4 per cent interest to relieve home-owners flattened under heavy mortgages has been known to be hampered by the fact that the Government, by law, guarantees only the interest and not the principal.

However, it is felt in some quarters that the appointment of a more experienced businessman to head the board will inspire more confidence in mortgage-holders, causing them to accept more generally the corporation's bonds in return for mortgages.

Fahey is a publisher of various New England papers. He is executive vice chairman of the business advisory and planning council of the Department of Commerce, and has long been active in financial fields.

Board Reviews Progress.

He was active in organization of both the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the International Chamber of Commerce. Since 1915 he has been a member of the International American High Commission, which was organized as a result of the Pan-American Finance Conference.

Coincided with announcement of the new appointment, the board issued a statement of its progress to date, pointing out that applications for refunding home mortgages are being tentatively approved at the rate of more than $5,500,000 a day.

Tentative approval indicates the field appraisers of the corporation have inspected the property, found it eligible, and that the mortgage holder has agreed to accept the corporation's bonds in return for the mortgage.

25,266 Foreclosures Halted.

A total of 3,390 loans, amounting to $9,796,529, have been paid out since organization of the branch bank to October 22. Except for $68,803 paid in cash, all these transactions were completed in bond transfers.

Of the cash loans $43,005 was paid for taxes or for repairs, leaving $25,748 that was paid out when the mortgage holders refused to take bonds in exchange for their mortgages.

The total number of foreclosures averted or postponed is 25,266, amounting to $75,795,763.

In Coma 127 Days, Woman Stariles Nurses by Words

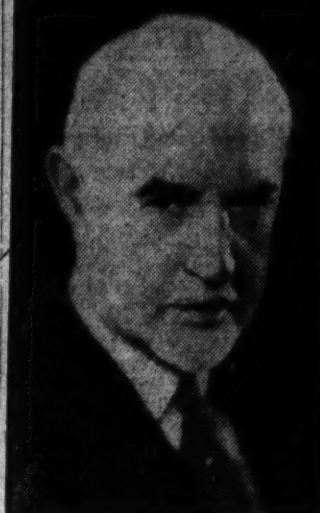

Richmond, Calif., Nov. 3 (AP)—Mrs. Georgea Pardini emerged today from the coma that has held her for 127 days.

Since June 29, when she suffered a brain injury in a motor-car accident, she had been in a coma at a hospital here. She had not spoken nor given evidence of knowing what was going on about her.

Today she surprised nurses by answering in monosyllables a question addressed her about her food.

She was still, however, does not understand what has happened to her. She does not know that her husband, Lorenzo Pardini, San Francisco wholesale merchant, was killed in the accident.

Republican Put In Manila Post By President

Prof. Hayden, of Michigan, Is Vice Governor; Four Island Jobs Filled.

President Roosevelt yesterday appointed Joseph Ralston Hayden, a Republican and a professor at the University of Michigan, to be Vice Governor of the Philippine Islands. Prof. Hayden is a specialist in Far Eastern affairs.

At the same time, the President named Anacleto Diaz, of the Philippines, and Leonard S. Goddard, of Tennessee, associate justices of the supreme court of the islands. He named J. Weldon Jones, of Ohio, as auditor there.

Prof. Hayden was born in 1887 in Quincy, Ill. He was graduated from Knox College, at Galesburg, Ill., in 1910, and joined the faculty of the University of Michigan, where he obtained master's and doctor's degrees. He began teaching political science in 1912 and in 1924 became a full professor.

In 1922 and 1924 Prof. Hayden served as exchange professor at the University of the Philippines. In 1930 and 1931 he served as Carnegie visiting professor at the Philippine institution.

With Carmel Thompson, Prof. Hayden investigated the possibilities of Philippine independence in 1926. He is author of the volume, "The Senate and Treaties."

During the war he was commanding officer of the rifle range at Virginia Beach.

British Seize State in India

Ruler Disregards Order to Return, and Crown Assumes Control.

New York, Nov. 3 (AP)—The British Raj again has asserted its authority in restive India, as indicated by a dispatch from Indore, and has once more resorted to the extreme measure of taking the administration of a native state out of the hands of the ruling prince.

This time it is the senior state of Dewas, in the central provinces. The maharajah, Sir Tukoji Rao Puar, had ignored a British ultimatum that he return to his state from Pondicherry, the French-Indian colony, by October 10.

By coincidence, Dewas, one of 15 states under the central provinces, is a neighbor of the great state of Indore, where, in 1925, the wealthy and powerful maharajah then in power was the center of a scandal involving the murder of a merchant friend of his favorite dancer, the beautiful Mumtaz Begum, and the mutilation of the girl.

The maharajah finally abdicated in favor of his son. Later, he created another sensation by marrying Miss Nancy Ann Miller, of Seattle.

The British government's action in Dewas is not expected to cause much of a political flurry in the Indian empire, because Dewas is a minor state. However, it will be a painful example for the hundreds of ruling princes and chiefs, for they are proud and very jealous of their rights and resent outside interference.

Two Sisters Fight W. R. Wood's Will

Sen. Kendrick, Wyoming, Dies; Career Varied

Little - Schooled Cowboy Became One of State's Richest Ranchers.

Sheridan, Wyo., Nov. 3 (AP).—John B. Kendrick, 78, senior United States Senator from Wyoming, died in a hospital here late today.

The cowboy-Senator only recently returned from Washington where he labored throughout the summer in behalf of the huge Casper-Alcova reclamation project in Wyoming.

He was stricken at his desk Wednesday night. Doctors at first called his illness cerebral hemorrhage, but later revised the diagnosis to uremic coma.

A Democrat in politics, a cowboy for the love of it, and a millionaire in lands and cattle, Kendrick was often called the most popular man in Wyoming. He was the oldest man in the Senate.

Partisan politics were forgotten where he was concerned, and from all over the State his constituents, Republican and Democrat alike, supported him in his labors at Washington.

During his later years in the Senate he worked tirelessly for the Casper-Alcova project, $23,000,000 reclamation undertaking, which was finally approved this summer by the Public Works Administration. The project is under way now and Wyoming looks on that as the crowning achievement of Kendrick's career.

A special election must be called to fill the vacancy.

A cowboy prototype of Abraham Lincoln, who studied by lantern light in the ranch bunkhouse while his fellow cowpunchers were "whooping it up" in saloons and dance halls of nearby towns, characterized the rise of John Benjamin Kendrick to one of the wealthiest live-stock ranchers of northern Wyoming and a seat in the United States Senate.

Senator Kendrick had completed only seven grades of the grammar school when, at the age of 16, he became a cowboy. Feeling the need of an education eight years later, while on a Wyoming ranch, he started to grind away nightly on grammar, arithmetic and history in the bunkhouse.

Bronzed by the sun and wind of the prairies, Senator Kendrick was a man of the West. The cattleman, who acquired a small empire of 200,000 acres for his herds in northern Wyoming and southern Montana, did not become interested in politics until 1910, when he was elected for two successive terms to the Wyoming senate. In 1914 he was elected governor, and in 1917 resigned to be elected to the United States Senate. Senator Kendrick was born September 6, 1857, in Cherokee County, Texas.

Woman's Death In Kline Query

Alleged 1931 Poisoning Is Fifth Being Linked to Plot Charge.

Los Angeles, Nov. 3 (AP).—Investigators announced today a fifth name added to those whose deaths are under investigation in connection with the activities of Alfred L. Cline, of Glendale.

Six months ago Mrs. Laura Cummings, 75, died at the home of a stepdaughter in Winthrop, Mass. Investigators said they learned Mrs. Cummings visited Los Angeles two years ago and became acquainted with Cline.

It was reported that Cline accompanied her to Seattle, where, in 1931, she became violently ill, and a doctor informed her she was poisoned.

After Cline left her, she was said to have discovered the loss of $3,000 in stocks and bonds. Investigators said that like others who figured in the investigation, she had made out a will naming Cline as her sole beneficiary.

Fixing Farm Prices.

Disappointed by the failure of farm prices to advance as rapidly as had been hoped, and alarmed by local uprisings in agricultural districts, the governors of five Midwestern States have come to Washington to urge, among other things, adoption of a price-fixing plan for certain basic farm commodities. Although the details of their proposal are unknown as yet, it is stated that the tentative schedule of fixed prices would be considerably above prewar parity, based on "cost of production plus a margin of profit."

One of the governors is reported to have said that "we need immediate increases in the price level. It doesn't much matter how it is done... If prices can be brought up to a fair level, other matters will take care of themselves." If this were true—that is, if prices could be raised at once by an official edict and subsequent adjustments be left to take care of themselves—the Government's elaborate official machinery for controlling production might as well be scrapped before the farmers have been given hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' money to compensate them for reduction of acreage.

Moreover, if price raising by proclamation can solve the farm problem, it ought to be equally efficacious in other lines of activity. Instead of laboriously organizing industrial groups, fixing wages and hours by agreement, and restricting output, it would be much more simple and direct for the Government to set prices for all kinds of commodities high enough to cover production costs and assure profits. Then, as Gov. Herring says, we could "let other matters take care of themselves."

The difficulty is that the adjustments which the Governor would leave to fate are not made when prices are fixed by governmental decrees, as is the case when competitive bids and offers determine the selling prices of goods. The farmer who is assured by the Government that his cotton will bring 15 cents per pound, his wheat $1.50 per bushel, and his corn possibly $1, naturally ceases to be concerned about the amount of cotton, wheat, and corn that other farmers are producing. To be sure, "production costs" would set an outside limit to the total amount of cotton, wheat or corn that could be grown profitably, but governmental edicts which attempt to set a "fair" price for the farmers' products would themselves place a limit on production costs.

Land that would remain uncultivated when wheat is selling for $1 per bushel may become highly desirable with wheat prices set above $1. The worst kind of farm land can be made to grow something, and much of it will be brought into use, if the cultivator is convinced that his production costs will be covered and a profit guaranteed by a kind, paternal government. Hence, no matter how high the level at which prices may be fixed, some marginal high cost farmer will receive no more than enough to cover the cost of growing crops that never would have been raised if they had to be sold in competitive markets. Price-fixing is certain to prove a costly experiment, because if the fixed price is above the competitive market price previously ruling, it offers a direct incentive to an increase in production without regard to the state of buying demand.

Last February the average prices received by farmers for products sold were about 51 per cent below the level of 1913, whereas the prices of goods bought by farmers were about the same as in 1913. By September, farm prices had risen to 70 per cent of the prewar average, while the prices paid by farmers for goods bought had increased only 15 per cent. Nevertheless, the price gap between these two groups of commodities still is very great. It is larger, too, than it was last July, when farm prices reached their peak for the year to date, and probably the disparity had increased during the month of October.

This situation has strengthened the agitation in some farming districts for instant action to raise farm prices by decree instead of relying upon the slower method of adjusting agricultural output to the reduced consumption demands of this country and other countries which buy our surplus farm products. No one questions the desirability of a better balanced price structure, but the benefits of higher prices will not be obtained by mere price-raising decrees.

This method of putting the cart before the horse would reduce buying demands for farm products, simultaneously increase output, and lead to accumulating surpluses of goods unsalable at high, fixed prices. The surpluses would have to be taken over by the Government, and paid for by the taxpayers. When the cost became too great to be borne, we should have to start afresh to struggle with the problem of adjusting the output of farm products to amounts that could be sold freely at prices to yield a profit to farmers.

Liquor Smuggling Prospects.

Revision or abrogation of the treaties relating to rum-smuggling probably will be a consequence of repeal of the eighteenth amendment and repeal of the Volstead act. Several nations which constituted the sources of liquor supply acknowledged that absolute prohibition in the United States called for more effective methods of preventing smuggling, and they signed treaties which recognized the right of American patrol vessels to seize rum runners at any point within twelve miles of the American coast. By this means, the hovering of rum-laden vessels off the coast was made more difficult and dangerous.

With the legalization of liquor traffic it is to be expected that the foreign governments concerned will take steps to terminate these treaties. The smuggling of liquor then will rank with all other smuggling activities, to be dealt with by the Coast Guard as best it can. Already it has become apparent that liquor smuggling will present special problems for the coast patrol. Whether the domestic tax be moderate or high, the heavy customs duties upon imported liquors will be evaded by smugglers if possible.

One of the changes expected after repeal is a reversal of smuggling operations over the Canadian border, or rather the substitution of two-way underground traffic for the one-way system that has been in vogue. As domestic production increases, whisky smuggling into Canada may prove profitable. In that event, an increase of border patrol forces on both sides of the line may be necessary.

Weather and Crime.

When a philosopher or economist propounds a riddle which tends to upset the mental equilibrium of the people he should be bound to present a solution also. Too many insoluble enigmas have been presented, and too many theories have been offered which raise more doubts than they dissolve. Here, for example, is Dr. C. A. Mills, professor of experimental medicine at the University of Cincinnati, who advances the theory that the highly variable and stimulating climate of the United States greatly increases human energy, goading it in the economic field to orgies of speculation, and in the social field to excesses in behavior.

He suggests that American weather exercises a peculiarly exciting influence upon the children of recent immigrants, causing them to vent their excess energy in deeds of crime. In the old countries, with their mild and monotonous climates, human energies are not stimulated beyond due bounds; but when immigrants come under the influence of the American climate, with its sudden and violent changes, they are driven wild by excess energy.

Assuming that Dr. Mills' theory is tenable, what is the remedy for the conditions which it postulates? Shall the weather be taken in hand by some Federal agency, and be tamed down? Or shall immigrants and their immediate progeny be given a course of "weathering" which gradually will harmonize their emotional outlets with the extra supply of energy generated by America's climate? What does Dr. Mills propose, if anything? Does he think he can throw this bomb of contention into the arena of debate and then plead immunity, statute of limitations, and an alibi?

One phase of Dr. Mills' theory might be seized upon to confute him—his assumption that crime is unduly prevalent in the offspring of recent immigrants. Newly arrived aliens and their progeny are law-abiding, as a rule. Many Western bandits are Americans, or Americans born. They are thoroughly acclimated, and nothing has been developed to show that their bank robberies and kidnappings are due to weather stimulation. They carry on their devilry rain or shine, with an equanimity of temper which belies the theory that their energies are born of weather vagaries.

Mexican-American Claims.

The welcome news comes from Mexico that Ambassador Daniels is making progress in the negotiations looking to a settlement of Mexican-American claims on a lump-sum basis. It is hinted that an agreement will be effected before the end of the year. After the restoration of good relations between the two governments in 1932 two commissions were established, one having jurisdiction over general claims filed by the citizens of one country against the government of the other, and the other charged with settlement of claims arising from revolutionary disturbances. Although these commissions held many sessions under different presidents or umpires, they made little progress, and the plan tacitly was abandoned.

Several decades ago, when private claims had piled up in similar manner, the United States and Mexico swept the table clean by a lump-sum arrangement whereby Mexico paid to the United States the balance due after matching the claims of both sides, and each government thereupon paid the claims of its citizens. Apparently a similar plan is under negotiation now. It seems to be the most satisfactory if not the only practicable method of adjusting private claims lodged against the respective governments.

Back to Potatoes.

The United States Bureau of Home Economics encourages the current trend toward curves and rounded figures with a special bulletin in praise of one starch food—the old reliable potato. Potatoes every day in the week is a suggestion in the low-cost food guide issued by the bureau, not only because most people like potatoes, not only because they eat them oftener than any other vegetable, but also because of their substantial food value.

White potatoes predominate in the North and sweet potatoes, or yams, in the South. Both contain the same starchy qualities and both provide the important vitamin A. If sweets are richer in sugar and vitamin A, white potatoes carry more iron. Balancing the variety of uses in the two varieties, Uncle Sam's experts give the palm to the white potato, since it is adaptable to more combinations with soups, meats and salads.

While the sweet potato appears usually as a main vegetable dish, those who have lived in Southern climates know in how many varied ways it is acceptable in candied form and in the delectable sweet potato pie. The Home Economics Bureau need make no apologies for suggesting potatoes as an every-day dish. There are many tables in some sections of the United States where potatoes are served not only every day, but at each of the three meals, and without them the man of the house would not feel that he had been properly sustained for the day's work.

The Bottom of the Sea.

It is customary to assume that virtually all the earth's surface has been explored and is reasonably well known. Only a few land areas in the polar regions and in the tropics remain to be penetrated and charted by civilized man. But all the continents and islands combined constitute only a little more than one-fourth of the area of the globe. Most of the underwater areas still are unknown.

For many centuries the bottom of the sea remained entirely an unexplained mystery. Man was unable to penetrate its depths. Consequently, strange beliefs developed as to the nature of the ocean bottom. Only in recent years has science made a comprehensive attack upon the mysteries of the sea.

A number of interesting facts have been brought to light by the floating laboratory of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. The institution's ship Atlantis, which carries a staff of eminent scientists, has just completed its twenty-third cruise in the North Atlantic.

For many years it was believed that no plant life could exist on the bottom of the sea because of the apparent absence of light. Scientists on the Atlantis found that ultra violet rays penetrate the depths even where no visible light is evident. Certain forms of marine life, such as plankton and diatoms, thus are able to thrive at immense depths. The scientists also found that various creatures which resemble crabs and shrimps live on the bottom of the sea, feeding on organic ooze.

Biologists have been puzzled by the fact that some of the fish that live at great depths where no light penetrates retain their eyes. Investigations have shown that in most instances creatures lose the use of organs that are no longer employed, and the organs themselves tend to disappear through long periods of evolution. It was found, however, that most of the monstrous creatures living at great depths in the sea produce light of their own. In some cases these lights are phosphorescent and in others they are produced by luminescent spots on the body. The scientists assume that these fish, which are carnivorous, use these lights in hunting their prey.

Efforts to bring some of these denizens of the deep to the surface alive have not succeeded. Because of the great difference in pressure between the bottom of the sea and its surface, the fish explode before they can be hauled from the water in especially constructed containers. But the biologists of the Atlantis are able to fit the fragments together again, and thus produce specimens of life in the unknown depths.

Five Western governors came to demand farm relief and the President countered by setting them to work to draft a plan. They hope to get home for Christmas.

Better World Conditions.

From the Topeka Capital.

The English economist, Sir Edward Layton, declaring that "the acute phase of the world economic depression passed last summer," expresses the hope that the American New Deal will be successful, particularly the NRA. But if it is not, improvement, this observer says, will go on. It is important to the world, "but it is not all-important," that the NRA should succeed.

In an interview in London with the United Press Layton noted that in 1929 in the United States "there was less currency in the hands of the people than there is now," which is undisputed. "The trouble is," he added, "there is plenty of money, but not in circulation." If more currency is issued he inquired how it is going to be got and kept in circulation, any more than currency already issued. That is a practical question. In his interview the British economist added:

Say you print $3,000,000,000 worth of notes. The question is how are you going to dispose of the notes? Are you going to distribute them to the unemployed in the form of doles? Are you going to remit taxation? What sections of the community are to be chosen as the distribution of the notes? Such measures would, of course, be inflationary. They would raise prices, but only if the money remained in circulation; not if it remained frozen after its original holders had spent it.

It is, of course, as Sir Edward Layton states, one thing for a government to spend money and get it out, but quite another thing "to depend upon private individuals for the process of redistribution. Individuals might simply hoard the new money, as they hoarded the old."

All this has been said not once but many times during discussion of the money question. There is more money than four years ago, when more business was transacted than is being transacted now. Therefore the reason for contraction in business can not be lack of currency, whatever else it may be, or whatever combination of reasons there may be. If money, capital and credit now available are put to active use business will jump forward. When men have confidence in the money of the country and see a sign of increasing demand they will go after business. Conditions have disappointed the country and the world this fall, after a sharp improvement in the spring and early summer, but if recovery has been disappointingly slow, yet conditions are materially better than a year ago.

Resignation or Rotation?

The Once Over.

By H. I. Phillips.

DR. ROOSEVELT VISITS THE PATIENT AGAIN.

Dr. Roosevelt—I thought I'd drop in and give you another looking over. How do you feel now?

Uncle Sam—I think I'm better, but it's very annoying to hear all those critics trying to tell me that I'm not. What do you think, doc?

Dr. Roosevelt—I'm positive you're better, but it's surprising how many people are trying to tell me that you're sicker.

Uncle Sam—There's one thing that is upsetting me, doctor. I keep imagining I hear harsh voices all about me in the night.

Dr. Roosevelt—That's not imagination, Sam. They're rising all around us.

Uncle Sam—Where are they coming from?

Dr. Roosevelt—Skeptics. I might say that the greatest danger threatening your recovery now is skeptic poisoning.

Uncle Sam—What are the symptoms?

Dr. Roosevelt—Oh, first one man raises his voice, then another, and then another; the first thing you know the old anvil chorus is ringing in your ears and making you feel pretty miserable.

Uncle Sam—But I thought everybody promised to be quiet until my fever went down.

Dr. Roosevelt—They did, but too many of them thought it would go down overnight. Americans are impatient people, even in the sick room. Because you're not back to fighting weight, some people want to fire the doctor already.

Uncle Sam—I want to get well as soon as possible, but don't they know I had one foot in the grave when you took over the case?

Dr. Roosevelt—There seems to be a feeling in some quarters that, all you were suffering from was dandruff.

Uncle Sam—What's this I hear about a change in the NRA pills?

Dr. Roosevelt—I'm going to give them to you in a new shape, but the ingredients will be largely the same. Do you find them disagreeable to take?

Uncle Sam—No, but every time I take one a lot of prominent people make awful faces.

Dr. Roosevelt—They're afraid of what's not in the pills.

Uncle Sam—Is there any truth in the rumor you're going to drop that Blue Eagle tonic?

Dr. Roosevelt—No. The trouble with the Blue Eagle tonic is that it's very hard to get the prescription filled honestly. Nearly every bottle that comes in has been adulterated.

Uncle Sam—Between me and the critics, you're having a tough time, ain't you, doc?

Dr. Roosevelt—You're all right, but there's nothing so unnerveing as a heckling while a surgeon is performing a major operation.

Uncle Sam—Which is apt to suffer most, the patient or the surgeon?

Dr. Roosevelt—It doesn't do either any good.

Uncle Sam—What do you say if you and I just close the windows and try to shut out the hecklers?

Dr. Roosevelt—I'm afraid it won't do much good. They're taking voice-throwing lessons. We'll have to grin and bear it.

Uncle Sam (firmly)—Okay, chief. You grin and I'll bear it.

BOARD'S THE WORD, ELMER, 'NOT DOOR.

Washington now plans to operate the NRA through a revolving board. "Ain't we dizzy enough?" demands Elmer Twitchell.

A Connecticut court has held that the NRA is not part of the body. As Jimmy Durante would say, "It's mutiny, that's what it is, mutiny!"

Peter Pan.

Of the plays thus far produced in the twentieth century, and I include all nations and all languages, the one that seems the most likely to hold the boards in the year 2033 is "Peter Pan," by Sir James Barrie. This was first produced in London at Christmastide in 1904, but it was not published until more than 20 years later, so that copies of the first edition are obtainable at a very reasonable price. Barrie has no recollection whatever of writing this play; he can not remember when or where he wrote it, and the manuscript has disappeared, except one scrap.

In England the role was created by Nina Boucicault and in America by Maude Adams. In December of this year Miss Boucicault will celebrate the fifth anniversary of her career as an actress. Sensibly she says, "I think it's very nice to be old. One has so many memories. I've had a very full life—traveled 'round the world and met the most charming people. Now I enjoy it over and over again."

When "Peter Pan" was produced in Paris the people liked best the ship scenes and the flying through the air. But they could not understand the dog Nana (according to Hilda Trevelyan) and Mr. Darling's inability to manage his tie was simply incomprehensible.

When Barrie gave the typescript of this play to Charles Frohman the latter thought he had lost his mind. "My God! What do you suppose he's done now? Pirates, fairies and a crocodile." Mr. Frohman did not see how the play could possibly succeed. So Barrie gave him "Alice Sit by the Fire" as a consolation. Then "Peter Pan" was the most tremendous success of its time. In Kensington Gardens, Hyde Park, London, a statue to Peter Pan was erected in 1912.

Another Letter From a Bald-Headed Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter.

By Robert Quillen.

My dear Louise:

Like others of your age, you sometimes resent the scheme of things that makes unpleasant duties interfere with pleasure. And doubtless you blame the adults who have authority over you and think how nice the world would be if it hadn't invented work.

But man didn't invent it. Nature's plan doesn't permit loafing. If one person is privileged to loaf all the time, some other is doing his share of work.

So far as I have been able to discover, there is no living creature that is able to live without a regular job. And some of them work harder than any dissatisfied "wage slave."

We have an example right here at home.

Little Buddy Jones, who lives across the street from us, has a pair of scrub bantams. The little black hen "stole her nest" this summer and hatched out a family of eight.

For some reason, probably economic, she decided to get her living on our lawn and return to the Jones place only at night.

Neither the R. F. C. nor the N. R. A. nor anybody in our household has knowingly contributed a grain to her support. She has had to dig for every morsel.

Though a widow with eight children to support—a grass widow, more's the pity!—she is the most cheerful individual I know. And by far the most industrious.

This morning I went out on the front porch "before day" to get the paper, and there she was on the lawn scratching for breakfast. One stroke with the left foot, two with the right, and then a momentary pause while the children got another helping.

The street lights were still on; the eastern sky held only a faint promise of dawn; the heavy morning air was still unpermeated by the first breakfast fumes; my indolent neighbors were still asleep. But this little widow was already on the job and her cheerful clucking contained no hint of self-pity or resentment.

Her daily running to and fro and the daily sum of her scratching must be equivalent to the labor of a dozen harvest hands.

Yet she is no exception. The robins that built in the rose vine worked as hard to prepare their house, and harder still when each of their three youngsters began to consume his own weight of rations between dawn and dusk.

This work business is a natural law and there is no way to evade it except by sponging. So long as you share the earth's bounty, you must do your share of the scratching. Love, Dad.

Press Comment

Farmers Can Combine.

Kansas City Times.

Gov. Bryan sees it as an unjust and intolerable situation that at the identical time farm prices have been declining the prices of goods the farmer must buy have been steadily mounting. The latter he charges with some reason has been due to abrogation of antitrust laws designed for public protection and to consequent combinations of industry that are held to be absolutely contrary to the public interest. A point the governor overlooks is that the same organization that is permitted industry also is being urged for the farmer. But it must be recognized that the present price disparities in the two fields leave not only the farmers, but a vast number of other consumers, in a vexatious predicament.

Hands Off in Europe.

Los Angeles Times.

The transcontinental cables are ringing a familiar song. "Europe is looking to America for cooperation in a course to meet the grave situation created by Germany's withdrawal from the disarmament conference and the League of Nations." This time it looks as if the song would fall on deaf ears. The President has indicated pretty plainly that mixing into the political rows of Europe is not part of his conception of our obligations in the direction of promoting international disarmament and world peace. There are not many Americans, recalling our late $11,000,000,000 lesson in the virtues of minding our own business, but will applaud his stand.

Great for the Speculators.

Kansas City Star.

The stand of the American Federation of Labor against inflation is frankly in the interest of the workers. They do not want to see prices rise while wages lag far behind. This has been the experience of every inflation in Europe, where it has brought wide distress.

The effect of inflation upon the farmers would be little different. Fear of inflation drives up the prices of commodities in which there is speculation, like wheat and cotton. But the prices of other farm products of which there has been overproduction would lag, while the prices of the manufactured products that the farmer buys would skyrocket. At the end of the inflation farm prices would crash. Not so good for the farmer.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Barger

IF IT WERE my own I thought it would not amount to much, but it so happens there are some economic and monetary minds hereabouts who are beginning to wonder if it is possible to have inflation in this country. Or at least, it is impossible short of measures that would pretty much wreck the country, which not even the most rabid inflationists are asking.

The feeling on the part of those of this belief is that we have become inflation-proof; that we have been through so much the people simply can not be excited to the extent necessary to get an inflation, regardless of manipulation of gold and currency.

Inflation to bring about the desired results of rising prices is a state of mind, you know. There must be a certain loss of confidence in money so that the volume of its turnover will increase and investors will rush to the security and commodity markets. Without this it is difficult to see where anything would be accomplished.

A lot is being written and said just now about the uncertainty of money holding up investments and retarding recovery, but there is reason to believe the Administration money manipulators are wondering if, instead of there being a lack of confidence, there is not too much. The public laughs off every effort to frighten it about money.

WHAT is the situation now in regard to the Administration's daily depreciation of gold? Every morning the three depreciation musketeers, Messrs. Jones, Dean Acheson and Henry Morgenthau, Jr., gather in the Treasury and announce that the Government has depreciated gold by 15 or 20 more cents or some price of that sort.

Nobody has been able to figure out how they arrive at their price. They simply come out of their closed room with a little slip of paper announcing the price of gold for the day. The best guess is that Prof. Warren, who has turned from his experimenting with horticulture and eggs to money, sends the slip to them and they hand it out. If this is the case the professor has a patent on his formula.

The man in the street reads streamers in the newspapers, takes another look at the paper dollars in his pocket, concludes it seems to have shrunk not a bit and he has no gold, so why should he be disturbed.

THIS is not the way it should work. He should be disturbed and rush to his merchant for a purchase of goods, or in wheat or rye or corn. Unless he does something of this kind, unless a sizable portion of the investing public does this, rising prices are not obtained and the Administration can talk until it is blue in the face about the dollar being cheaper one day than it was before.

The public did not use to be this unexcitable. We worked ourselves into an awful stew about going off the gold standard. Chaos, it was said, would be the result. The Republicans insisted, and we certainly were going off that basis if the Democrats were elected. Chaos, it would be, the Democrats agreed, but the suggestion that they would carry us off was absurd.

Then we went off the gold standard and no one knew anything about it.

Also the public got badly burned in the late spring and early summer. The people rushed into the market then under the threat of inflation and again got caught holding the bag. The impression is that it would take dynamite to blow them back in now.

Just Folks.

By Edgar A. Guest.

Heart Courageous.

There's a little old lady who lives down the way
Who has never a word of her sorrows to say.
She has buried her husband, her children and friends,
Still bravely her gay little garden she tends.

And bravely she smiles as if never a care
Or the anguish of sorrows had allvered her hair.

One morning as dawn came I wandered along,
Because some little plan of my own had gone wrong.
She noticed my frown as I came to her gate
And asked me my burden of trouble to state.

"Oh, I know how you feel," she replied with a smile,
"But don't bear a grudge, for it isn't worth while!"

I thought of her sorrows and stood there ashamed
To think that my own petty trouble I'd named.
She passed me a rosebud to pin on my coat,
And I couldn't say thanks for the lump in my throat.

She patted my arm and she said to me there:
"Remember we all have some burdens to bear."

Dear, brave little lady, thought I, as I left,
Of all who have loved you so sweetly and left
Yet smiling and cheerful and hiding your woes
Neath a manner so gentle that no one may know.

Should I be the last of my circle to stay,
God grant me such faith as I've seen you display.

Goering Takes Stand Against Fire Suspects

Premier Slated to Tell of "Communist Peril" to Germany.

Berlin, Nov. 3 (AP).—Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Prussian premier and national minister without portfolio, will testify tomorrow before the supreme court in the trial of five alleged Communists accused of firing the Reichstag Building last February.

An announcement today said "the Prussian premier will testify about the Communist menace at the time of the fire," but it was anticipated that the temperamental Goering would not let slip the chance to hurl defiance at what the court has often referred to as "the monstrous foreign allegations against our leaders."

It was recalled that Capt. Goering has been accused of having supervised the parliament incineration from his official residence, which is connected by a subterranean tunnel with the Reichstag. The statement that Goering would appear had an electric effect on the courtroom audience, bored by 30 days of testimony about the underground passage through which it was suggested the incendiaries might have escaped; the steadfast avowals of Marinus van der Lubbe that he alone set the blaze, and the complaints of another defendant, Ernst Torgler, one-time Reichstag Communist whip.

Another of the accused, Georgi Dimitroff, returned to the hearing today after being ejected Wednesday, but was sent out once more, this time for three days, because his questions to the prosecutor were "insulting."

Dimitroff, one of three Bulgarian defendants, had threatened to eclipse everybody and everything else in the trial by his impulsive, pointed sallies.

Today he got no further than this sarcastic comment, "Mr. Prosecutor, you have got to learn about Soviet Russia."

Census of Nation Sought for 1934

given State or city have been based on the last regular census plus the annual rate of growth for the previous 10-year period. For instance, the last census gave the Nation's population as 127,755,046. The rate of growth during the past 10 years was 1,800,000 a year. On this basis, the population of the United States would now be 127,755,046. However, census experts believe the population is only 125,325,046.

They explain this difference by the fact that last year 140,000 more persons left the United States than entered it. But more important, they say, is the startling decrease in the birth rate. This has dropped from 25 per 1,000 in 1915 to 17.4 per 1,000 in 1932, it was said. The greatest drop has been in the last four or five years. In 1928, when the United States had a somewhat smaller population, there were 2,233,000 births. In 1932 there were 2,060,000. Getting the figures down to a scale for easier comparison, there were 468 births each day in the United States in 1932 than in 1928.

Reduction in the death rate is not keeping pace with the drop in births. In 1932 there were 233 fewer deaths than in 1928. Census experts believe the population is becoming stationary rapidly. In addition, they point out that because of the rapid reduction in the birth rate, the percentage of persons over 45 is higher than at any time in the history of the country.

Cities Face Exodus.

The problem, however, that is worrying census officials most is that of what is happening to the cities. They believe the drift to the country has been so great that many of the more important cities are no larger, and perhaps not as large now as they were in 1930. They say they are unable to estimate the population of any given city because of the degree of accuracy. They feel that figures revealed by the proposed new census may come as a great shock to some civic committees and home-town boosters.

Dr. Stuart A. Rice, assistant director of the census, who as president of the American Statistical Association, is active in advocating the new census, points out that these figures are very necessary to any accurate comparison of vital statistics.

Birth and death rates are based on numbers of births and deaths per 1,000 population. He believes that present birth and death statistics are inaccurate because no one knows the exact population of the areas reporting.

Death Statistics Doubled.

Incidentally, Dr. Rice believes the new census will disprove the theory that the death rate is falling unusually fast during the depression. He thinks the death rates reported from various cities are much too low because they are based on population figures that are too high. He believes that new figures will not show the death rate much lower, if any lower, now than during the years before the depression.

Census experts feel that the new figures will show the population is drifting not so much to the strictly rural areas as to suburban areas around big cities. They feel that there is no substantial drift westward, but merely outward from centers of population and that the center of population of the country probably has not moved appreciably from the spot in Western Indiana where it was located in 1930.

One of the cities being used by census experts for study and as an example of what is happening is Detroit. In 1930, Detroit had a population of 1,569,000. On the basis of the rate-of-growth system used by the census bureau in estimating population, Detroit would now have a population of 1,721,000. As a matter of fact, experts say, Detroit probably is smaller than it was in 1930.

Pieces of Eight

Capt. Teach, one arm about his bride, drank the toast to her and called loudly for a response. But Prudence, almost hysterical with fear, reached for her mother's hand, and was unable to say a word. There was a moment of silence.

The Pirate Is Enraged

"The feast is over, ye clods," cried the gigantic captain. "Clear the decks!" he shouted to his men. He did not seem to see his little bride, Prudence, as she sat, petrified with cold terror, in her chair.

By Charles B. Driscoll

Guests gone, wreckage cleared, Capt. Teach looked upon his terrified bride. He seemed to see her for the first time, as he grabbed her up into his arms and started below. "Up anchor!" he roared to his crew. "Make sail for the open sea!"

U. S. Murder Suspect Loses Fight in Italy

Supreme Court Declares Spinelli Must Stand Trial in Pittsburgh.

Rome, Nov. 3 (AP).—The supreme court ruled today that Giuseppe "Big Mike" Spinelli is no longer an Italian citizen and that he must return to Pittsburgh for trial in the gangland murder of the three Volpi brothers.

The Volpi brothers were slain in the summer of 1932 by several men who entered their coffee shop headquarters and fired a volley as the trio ate breakfast.

Spinelli embarked secretly for Italy, which he had left in 1925, and went back to his native town, of which he once was the acting mayor.

United States authorities have contended he renounced his Italian citizenship several years ago when he fled his application for American citizenship. This was upheld by the supreme court.

Spinelli maintains he was a friend of the Volpi, who also were natives of Agropoli.

State Department officials expressed satisfaction last night at the extradition order granted by the supreme court in Italy for Giuseppe "Big Mike" Spinelli. Officials told the Associated Press extradition proceedings have been in progress for about a year.

Entire U. S. Fleet Will Leave Pacific

regarded the exchange of notes between President Roosevelt and President Kalinin of Soviet Russia with marked lack of enthusiasm, tempered only by a strong premonition of half a year's standing that American recognition of the Soviet Union was on the calendar.

A Japanese might be pardoned for considering the shadow of approaching Soviet-American friendship and the whole United States fleet in the Pacific a little too much of a good thing.

The fleet's Atlantic cruise will coincide with the President's intended trip to the Caribbean and Hawaii.

The decision to call the fleet back to the Atlantic for a few months was announced following a White House conference attended by Secretary of the Navy Swanson, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt and Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations.

A skeleton fleet will remain in the Pacific, consisting of three or four battleships, two or three heavy cruisers, one or two light cruisers, 15 destroyers and six submarines. The base air force stationed at San Diego also will remain behind.

Approximately 11,000 men and 900 officers are scheduled to remain on duty in the North Pacific States and the Asiatic Squadron will not be affected by the cruise.

Navy officials estimated yesterday the cruise would bring 9 or 10 battleships (the New Mexico, Mississippi and Wyoming are already in the Pacific), 7 or 8 heavy cruisers and as many light ones, 50 destroyers, the aircraft carriers Lexington, Saratoga and Langley and 16 auxiliaries, including mine sweepers and tugs, through the Panama Canal. Some 50,000 men and 4,000 officers will make the cruise.

Admiral David F. Sellers will be in command, with Admiral J. M. Reeves commanding the battle force and Vice Admiral Frank H. Brumby in charge of the scouting division.

Assistant Secretary Roosevelt explained the operation as a return to the fleet's normal operating policy. This policy calls for long cruises in both oceans, he said, in order that the personnel may become thoroughly experienced in tactics, maneuvers, navigation and piloting problems on both coasts. The cruise will also permit East-Coast ships to return to their home yards for overhaul, he said.

Italian Armistice Observance Today

The Italian Ambassador and his staff will attend.

At 11 o'clock a wreath will be placed on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

The day's celebration will be concluded with a dinner dance at the Villa Roma at 8 o'clock.

M. Ferreri, president of the District Department of the Italian Veterans, is in charge of the exercises.

Progressives Attack G. O. P.

Assail Party for Thrusts at Roosevelt, Ask Nation's Aid.

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—The National Progressive Republican Organization today appealed to the Nation to support President Roosevelt and demanded that attacks on his Democratic Administration cease.

"The attack just made by the Republican National committee against the recovery program of the Administration will be resented by the American people," said a statement issued by the Progressives' National committee.

"The utter failure of the reactionary Republicans to properly manage the country is still fresh in the minds of the people."

"This group which failed so recently can not with good grace attack the present Administration which is at least making an honest attempt to do something on behalf of the people."

"Good sportsmanship requires that the President be given a fair chance to put his plans in operation."

The statement was signed by Newton Jenkins, Richard W. Wolfe and Robert McCormick Adams, members of the general committee of the Progressives' national organization. Many leaders in the Progressive organization supported Roosevelt's candidacy against Herbert Hoover last year.

200 Protestant Sects in U. S.

Endless Controversies Have Marked Long History of Church; Quibble of Ultra-Orthodox Evoked Charter of Religious Liberty in Jerusalem.

By William T. Ellis.

Quibblers are common. Everybody is familiar with the sort of mind that can grasp a small fact more easily than a great principle. Millions of good people have concentrated their religious interest upon modes of baptism, forms of dress, character of ritual, observance of one day instead of another as Sabbath, forms of church government or specific incidental details of Scripture, such as perfectionism or millennialism.

They stress these to the exclusion of the major Message of the New Testament. Older folk will recall how Presbyterian congregations once split over the question of using a musical instrument in public worship. To this day there are many Christians who think card-playing, theater-going and dancing are tests by which a true Christian is to be judged.

Well, there is Scriptural precedent for these good persons who get too firm a hold on some detail of religion. There were devout and lowly Jewish Christians in Jerusalem, in apostolic days, who were shocked at the thought of anybody's entering the Christian Church except through the Mosiac door. They insisted circumcision was essential to salvation.

Not only did they believe this intensely, but they also propagated it, even sending missionaries to the new church at Antioch to preach their Judaizing doctrine—just as certain "peculiar" independent missionaries in foreign lands today get back from their first missionary tour and found the home church at Antioch in a ferment over teachings of these self-appointed Judaizers from Jerusalem.

This was the first great controversy in the long history of the Christian Church, a history that has been marked by endless controversies since. Its teachings are especially pertinent to the United States, where there are more than 200 Protestant denominations, some of which owe their origin to personal rivalries of ambitious churchmen.

Fortunately, the mood of most Christians is far more tolerant at the present time. As families move from city to suburbs, they naturally join the neighborhood church, and find it no wrench.

In the case which constitutes the present Lesson, Paul and Barnabas, ever men of action, went up to Jerusalem to appeal the case to the Mother Church, ruled by apostles and elders who knew the mind of Christ. They believed in Church authority in those days, a thing which liberal, modern rituals, some like the Quakers, discard all ritual.

But all of them accept Jesus, Christ as their personal Savior, and seek to govern their lives by His will. And wherever found, they are Christians, and members of His invisible church.

The International Sunday school lesson for November 5 is: "Paul in Jerusalem," Acts xvi-33.

Extra Chances.

It is always desirable to reserve as many extra chances in the play of the hand as possible, when consistent with the sound method of play.

In the hand given below, Mr. S. M. Stayman, of New York City, had the foresight to retain two separate and independent methods of fulfilling his contract, so that if one failed he would always have recourse to the other. That it was fortunate for him to be possessed of so much foresight was amply demonstrated in the course of the play.

The bidding:

North's three-notrump bid was, perhaps, a little optimistic, but North and South played a system in which North's one-heart response to his partner's diamond bid might have shown no honor strength whatsoever, so that South's two-notrump bid was in the nature of an Original two-notrump bid and guaranteed some heart strength, causing North to believe his suit might be valuable.

In the play, West opened the four of spades, which East won with the Ace. East's spade-three lead trapped South's Queen under the King-Knave, and the remaining spades were cashed, the last being taken by East with the nine. On this play, South was forced to discard.

The diamonds were all sure winners and the small club represented a trick if the adverse clubs were divided 3-3. South's obvious course, therefore, was to throw away a heart. But he could also see that in case one of his adversaries held a fourth-round club stopper, he would have to look elsewhere for the development of the ninth trick he needed for his contract, which trick could be made only by a successful heart finesse. If he allowed himself to be left with the Queen of hearts alone even a successful

Fables Parade In Gay Eating Place Murals

Fairy Princess in Scarlet Sleigh Rides Merrily to Gypsy Music.

By Ruth Anne Davis.
Spirited steeds draw a scarlet sleigh, while a "far pitter," fairy bird, flaps its brilliant wings. Near by a "boyarino," or medieval prince, looks on disdainfully, surrounded by soldiers that might have stepped out of a Chauve Souris parade. These colorful things give only a hint of the atmosphere to be found in a Washington restaurant.

Indirect lighting throws red, blue, yellow and green rays over exotic murals, including the aforementioned sleigh and bird and princess. One of the pictures depicts "na prikku," the quaint custom of a certain European country, which consists of placing a lump of sugar in the mouth, then pouring hot bitter tea over it.

A huge lantern is suspended from the center of gold, blue and red drop ceiling. Gleaming candles are on the tables. While gypsy music is played by a continental orchestra, waiters in native costume serve piquant dishes from their home land. Delicious American food is also served, but the person who likes to experiment with foreign cooking should try shashlik or caucasian. It's diced lamb with all sorts of unusual things done to it.

A 65-cent luncheon is served in this thoroughly delightful restaurant. The menu consists of soup or appetizer, entree, vegetable, dessert and beverage. But don't expect to hear the gypsy orchestra at noon. It doesn't make its appearance until the dinner hour.

Dinner, with dancing and entertainment, is served from 6 to 10 p. m. A table d'hôte, with wide choice of entrees, is served for $1.50. Supper hours are from 10 p. m. to 2 a. m.

In addition to the room with the drop ceiling, there is a small gypsy room and a Louis XV room. The latter is for private parties.

Luncheon in this restaurant's old-world atmosphere is a perfect prelude to the matinee. But do go some night for dinner, when the indirect lighting is weaving magic and the gypsy orchestra is playing fascinating music.

Burnt orange and apple green form the color scheme in a tea room, housed in a building more than 100 years old. A member of President Madison's retinue once lived in the old-fashioned house, so the story goes. Of course, the place has been remodeled considerably since Colonial days, but the Colonial feeling is still there.

Luncheons and dinners are served in three rooms. The largest is long and narrow and has two fireplaces, painted green to match the walls. Tables and chairs are burnt orange.

Then there is a small, intimate sort of room, and a many-windowed room that looks out upon a garden. Several tables are placed in front of comfortable wall seats instead of chairs.

Luncheon, served from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m., is 40 cents. A typical menu consists of old-fashioned bean soup, fried country ham with two vegetables, hot bread and beverage. Dinner is served from 5 to 8 p. m. on week days and from 1 to 8 p. m. on Sundays. During the week, dinner is 60 cents. On Sundays it is 75 cents.

Crushed nuts, brown sugar and sweetened light dough make Streusel-coffee cake that is positively "yummy." The nuts and sugar are spread in a thick layer over the round, flat loaf before it is put in the oven. When it is baked, the golden brown top is just as tasty as it looks. These coffee cakes, nice big ones, sell for 20 cents.

"Ride a cock horse to Banbury Cross"—Every bit of the ride will be a pleasure if Banbury tarts are at the end of the journey. Raisins and apples are coily tucked inside fat, round buns of crispy, flaky pastry with heaps of sugar on top. They're fine for breakfast or a hearty tea. Price, 5 cents each.

Onion soup as it is served in Les Halles, Paris, is a specialty at downtown restaurant, which also prides itself on its steaks, broiled over hickory chips.

The serving of beer is something of a rite in this restaurant that goes in for food rather than atmosphere, music or entertainment. In order to serve the foaming beverage at the proper temperature, between 40 and 45 degrees, the keg is placed in the refrigerator. The beer is then drawn directly from the wood.

Men are better judges than women of good food, so we're told. Peep into this restaurant some day at the luncheon hour. You'll see a large number of men, intent upon the interesting menu. There are always enough women in the place, however, so that Aunt Molly may be taken there without making her feel the least self-conscious. If Aunt Molly has a single epicurean instinct, she'll soon forget herself in the food anyhow.

Society Women Model Gowns At Style Show

Velvet Afternoon Gown, Pink Evening Frock and Others Displayed.

Smart winter costumes were modeled by prominent Washington society women yesterday at an exclusive style parade and card party.

The style show was held in the afternoon at the Shoreham under the auspices of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Harvey Wiley, president of the Federation, wore an eel grey transparent velvet afternoon gown with the new, longer waistline. The gown's front, in surplice style, had shirring at the shoulders. A narrow panel extended from shoulder to wrist on cut velvet dolman sleeves. A large crystal ornament with brilliant and grooved silver, fastened the narrow sash in front.

Mrs. Frank Shortall, president of the Political Study Club, modeled a shell pink satin evening gown. Double panels hung from shoulders to waist in back. The front cowl and empire bodice were in the Vionnet manner. A huge pink and brown silk flower defined the empire line. With this gown Mrs. Shortall wore a three-quarter length white lapin coat with Johnny collar.

Schlaparelli blue crepe and gold thread embroidery made the wide yoke of a black sheer crepe dinner gown, worn by Mrs. Harry Packard. Divided capelet sleeves were cut in one with the boat-necked yoke.

Miss Margaret Frazer showed a blackberry transparent velvet dinner gown with dyed lace bertha which was cut to a V in back and ended in two velvet loops.

In addition to the room with the drop ceiling, there is a small gypsy room and a Louis XV room. The latter is for private parties.

Luncheon in this restaurant's old-world atmosphere is a perfect prelude to the matinee. But do go some night for dinner, when the indirect lighting is weaving magic and the gypsy orchestra is playing fascinating music.

Washington Man Finds Strange Indian History

Aged Squaw, Sole Survivor of Tribe, Reveals Its Folkways.

More than 75 years ago a little Indian girl, cruelly beaten by her mother, ran away from a sordid adobe hovel where she was not wanted and found precarious refuge among an alien people.

Now, nearly 90 years old, but with a clear memory, she finds herself probably the last survivor of her tribe and the last person left on earth who speaks the language of her ancestors and remembers their legends.

She has just been "discovered" by John P. Harrington, Smithsonian Institution ethnologist. Mr. Harrington, on leave of absence from the institution, is engaged in locating many as possible of the last survivors of the numerous tribes which once inhabited California. Some of these peoples have disappeared completely, leaving no record of their culture or their language. Others are represented still by one or two old men or women, who usually have been long out of contact with the ways of their ancestors and who often have badly shattered memories.

The old lady, Harrington reports, is one of the most valuable contacts he has made with a dead past. Not only has she a large Indian vocabulary, but a clear memory of many of the old folkways.

The sole survivor of another California tribe found by Mr. Harrington is an Indian nearly 100 years old. Under the guidance of this old man Mr. Harrington has just completed an automobile trip through the sacred country of the vanished people. He has located and marked some of the localities and natural curiosities to which they attached a supernatural significance.

These sacred places are associated, for the most part, with a folk hero named Mikitti. One of them is the flower rock, a boulder with a peculiar flowerlike form, with smaller rocks under it arranged like sepals. Mikitti, chased by a bear, is supposed to have escaped into heaven by jumping upon this rock.

In addition to the room with the drop ceiling, there is a small gypsy room and a Louis XV room. The latter is for private parties.

Decorative New Bathroom Fixtures Can Do Two or Three Things at Once

Directed by Amos Parrish

Information as to where articles of the type illustrated and their variations are available in Washington will be given by the Fashion Department, The Washington Post, on request.

New York, Nov. 4.—Have a look at the bathroom. What does it need to make it handier . . . less coldly utilitarian? Everything? Or just a few colorful doodads?

It's due for an entire going over and some handsome new fixtures, wait until you hear about some we've just looked at. Fixtures that come with walls attached to them, so to speak.

Attached to Steel.
Each piece—stand, tub, toilet—is mounted on a steel unit, colorfully enameled. Each of these steel affairs stands about six inches away from your bathroom wall, being fastened to it by screws. And they contain all the piping and gadgets needed for proper plumbing, so that they can be installed without any fuss.

The bathtub unit extends only a few inches above the tub and has a raised metal shelf for your pet soaps in bath suds, powder and so on. And the lavatory unit goes clear from floor to ceiling, providing a metal cabinet and bottle shelf and storage place for cleansers, as well as the wash stand.

Small Pieces.
If you're not going in for anything so elaborate, you'll want to know what you can do with small fixtures . . . cabinets and hampers and so on.

One compact bathroom-dressing room we know of has a dressing-table which might be called the lazy Susan of the bathroom. The middle of the top lifts up to disclose a mirror. And as it lifts, presto . . . two lights on each side automatically go on. A door on one side hides shelves for toilet accessories . . . on the other side it opens into a hamper. The top, with the little chair, in the sketch. The towel rack below doesn't guarantee to do anything but hold towels . . . but it does that with special efficiency, providing a rod for each of the family (unless you're like the old woman who lived in the shoe).

The oval cabinet with flowers on the door is another handy piece. You can put linens on the shelves and use the top for bottles and jars. Even the hamper at the top of the sketch opens from below, leaving the top free for extras.

Cut-Outs Help.
If you want to get more color into the actual decorating of the room, you needn't even paint. Cut-out designs of fish, Victorian flowers and such things can be slipped on the walls with rubber cement. Linoleum, too, makes attractive walls. Easy to take care of, since it can be washed.

Leaflet on Hands.
But whether you spend a little or a lot, you'll find it was worth it. Worth it in looks when you have guests. Worth it in handiness for the family. And don't you think you yourself will find it easier to go through the beauty rites you often skip? In a gayer, more convenient bathroom? Creaming your face, taking care of your hands.

Even though we aren't talking of cosmetics, that reminds us of a leaflet you'd like, telling ways to keep your hands young looking. We'd be glad to send it if you'll fill in and mail the coupon.

First Lady Labors Over Dream Project Of Village Homes for Destitute Miners

Community at Arthurdale to Be Self-Supporting, She Says.

A model self-supporting West Virginia village—a cluster of humble cottages around a small factory—is Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's fondest welfare project, she told her press conference yesterday.

The model community is located at Arthurdale, West Va., and is scheduled to be the first of a series of similar villages to aid the West Virginia miners and their families who have suffered severely through the years of the depression.

Mrs. Roosevelt is on the committee to make the housing arrangements and chose the families who shall be the first to try the experiment.

She is holding almost daily conferences with other workers on the project, and she plans to make a trip to Arthurdale as soon as her White House duties permit.

"I believe this is one of the most important relief projects that has ever been undertaken," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "My work is particularly fascinating because we handle all requests for houses."

Houses Have Showers.

Mrs. Roosevelt said that the one request most of the destitute miners made was to have houses big enough to provide a bed for everybody. "The houses won't have bathtubs," she explained. "But most of them will have showers and otherwise completely fitted bathrooms."

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

"If we can possibly manage the architects we will also try to install tubs in some of the later houses."

Plan to House Suffering Miners, President's Idea.

The President's wife added that the architects who are drawing up the plans for the model dwellings have, in many cases, failed to provide space for extensive bathing facilities.

Undeafened by Hardships.
Many of the miners, said Mrs. Roosevelt, have been out of work as long as seven years, and she has found it particularly encouraging that they haven't been beaten even by this.

The Post Office Department will purchase the output of a small factory which will be built.

The idea of a rural community built up around a factory, which would provide employment for any members whose labor was not necessary for the support of the community, has been an idea long held by the President, Mrs. Roosevelt said. It was for this reason that both the First Lady and her husband entered into the project at Arthurdale so enthusiastically.

Mrs. Roosevelt will spend this morning in conference with Bushrod Grimes, director of the project, and Col. Louis M. Howe, the President's secretary, who is also a member of the community.

Washington Women in Welfare Work

Care of Sick Children Chief Concern of Mrs. Faust's Charity.

Keenly interested in the welfare of children, Mrs. Frederick deC. Faust is president of the Child Welfare Society, a member of the board of Children's Hospital and of the board of the Children's Country Home. In addition to this, she finds time to serve as a member of the board of the Y. W. C. A. and to take an active interest in the work of the Community Chest.

There is quite a divergence in the two children's organizations which Mrs. Faust serves. The motto of the Child Welfare Society is "Keep the well child well" and the work of that organization is entirely preventive, while the Children's Country Home is devoted to the care of convalescent children, who, after hospitalization, need particular diets and certain care to regain their health.

Speaking of her interest in child welfare work, Mrs. Faust says: "I think there is no more vitally important work at this time than the prevention of sickness among infants and little children. The splendid results accomplished in recent years by preventive measures adopted by the medical profession have demonstrated the necessity of this important work."

"So many of the illnesses of children are of an insipid nature and so easily detected by a doctor or trained nurse—but so easily overlooked by the average parent—that the future health of little children depends largely upon the successful operation of this child welfare work."

Society Hip Flask Out, Says Matron

Lady Who Launches Debutantes Sees Whiskey Losing Cast.

(Associated Press.)

Repeal will soon banish the hip flask and its contents from fashionable parties, predicts Mrs. William Laird Dunlop, who is a member of one of Virginia's aristocratic families and whose business is bringing out debutantes.

During the prohibition years, she said, the brilliant social affairs for which she has been sponsor have had the hidden accompaniment of the hip flask.

"In the young society group with which I deal, prohibition made drinking the spectacular thing, and gave whiskey far too important a place," she related.

"Whiskey became fashionable, where it used to be thought disgraceful. Before the eighteenth amendment, the young girl was shocked if her escort presented himself with even the aroma of whiskey on his breath.

"Repeal will kill that vogue."

Upton Sinclair Celebrates
Fifty-Fifth Birthday
With New Book.

Upton Sinclair, militant writer of novels which are tracts and tracts which are novels, has just celebrated his fifty-fifth birthday by producing his forty-seventh book. It seems that several California Democrats asked him to run for the governorship in the recent primaries. He didn't do it. Rather, he indulged in one long day dream on how it might all have happened if he had been elected, wrote it out, and entitled it, "The Governor of California, and How I Ended Poverty."

E. M. Deland, author of those sprightly novels about "The Provincial Lady," is to lecture in town here from November 16 to 19. It may prove a bit dangerous for the people she meets, since she is a voraciously gathering material for her forthcoming novel, "The Provincial Lady in the United States."

Louis Bromfield, after raising something of a stir in Baltimore real estate and literary circles, gave up the notion of living there for the winter. He has installed himself and family in a house in Princeton, N. J., for six months, from which he can make easy jaunts to both New York and Washington.

A dollar-a-year house on a 10-year lease provided by the Carnegie Institute is the perquisite of Ann Astell Morris, one of the very few women archeologists in the country, and her husband. It stands in Aztec, New Mexico, from which they make expeditions into the field to uncover prehistoric Navajo caves. Mr. Morris headed the Carnegie expedition into Yucatan. His greatest achievements, the discovery of the most perfect mummy in America. On Wednesday Doubleday Doran published her account of their recent work, "Digging in the Southwest."

Rockwell Kent designed every detail of a window display which Dutton's Bookstore, in New York, gave his "Rockwell Kentiana," his volume of "Words and Pictures." Although it takes an unusual length of time to prepare the second edition called for, owing to the difficulty of reproducing the 130 deep tone offset illustrations, Harcourt Brace will issue it November 10.

With the very charming title of "The Divine Evadne," Booth Tarkington's latest novel begins serially in the November Good Housekeeping. One can almost guess that Mr. Tarkington's heroine was named from the word "divine." By finding a woman's name with "d," "v" and "n" neatly combined, he produced a title which stands in sheer euphony just below F. Scott Fitzgerald's all-time perfect "This Side of Paradise."

Japanese "Reds."

A collection, "THE CANNERY BOAT," by Takiji Kobayashi, and other Japanese short stories. International Publishers, New York, $1.50.

This unusual volume is one of a red-jacketed series issued by International Publishers, a leading agency for the distribution of proletarian literature. Its list includes works by authors in all nations who are active propagandists for "world revolution."

The purpose of bringing "A Cannery Boat" and other Japanese stories together in one volume is to demonstrate the growth of the Communist movement in literature in the Far East. The leading story, from which the book takes its title, is the work of Takiji Kobayashi, an active agitator who was later imprisoned and—alleged—tortured to death by the Japanese police.

It is interesting to read these vivid stories and to find in them exactly the same damning faults which characterize proletarian literature in America. All strike the same monotonous tone of sordidness and unredeemed misery; in each there is a black villain, the boss, and a high hero, the worker. In every case the theme is the same—ruthless exploitation from above, gathering feelings of protest from below.

The honesty and crusading sincerity of such unadorned writing is its virtue. But it always remains in the stage of a "social document," it never once rises to authentic drama of real individuals.

WILLIAM HARLAN HALE.

Stock On the Wane.
A novel, "REHEARSAL OF LOVE," by Arthur Shumway. Kings, $2.00.

That dramatic "stock companies" are fading out in competition with the ubiquitous movies is a truism to be found in any issue of Variety for the last few years. Mr. Shumway makes a novel of it, recites the last stand of a group of actors in a small Indiana town. All that moves one in the story is the spectacle of this generality. The characters, save for the manager and his wife, a half-crazy taxi driver, who is smitten with the ingenue, and an old stager threatened with oncoming blindness, seem usual and obvious. But it remains true that the courage and persistence of the company in the face of theatrical accidents and inevitable defeat is vital enough to give breath and pulse to the novel.

Mr. Shumway's works split in two parts. On the one hand he writes serials for newspaper syndicates; on the other his stories have found a place in such serious literary magazines as Pagan and the Midland. O'Brien has triple-starred several of the latter. Though "Rehearsal of Love" lies on his serious side, it does not seem worth an equivalent distinction.

Steak or Chops.

By Ruth Chambers.
When the "family" numbers but two, there are problems of economy and of variety for the one who does the shopping and preparation of the meals, which are unlike those of the housewife who cooks for several. These "kitchenette" meals, shared by newly wed couples or elders whose children have left and by business girls who are doing their own housekeeping, need not be limited to chops and small steaks for their meat course. There is a fairly wide variety of cuts to be chosen by one who "knows how."

These are sometimes less expensive because less in demand. They can be completely utilized, too, for the "left-overs" may be the basis of delicious dishes.

Veal Birds.

Veal birds are another nice individual dish.
Buy a slice of veal from the leg. Cut into strips 3 inches long and 2 inches wide. Spread with bread dressing and season with salt and pepper. Roll up each strip and fasten with a toothpick. Brown in hot lard. Add a small amount of water if necessary and cook until tender. Thicken the liquid and add a little sour cream for gravy.
If pork is your preference, here is a way of cooking chops to make a one-dish meal.

One-Dish Pork Chops.

Have the pork chops cut about 1 1/2 inches thick. Dredge with flour and brown in hot fat. Place a slice of onion on each chop, then put a tablespoon of raw rice on top of the onion, then a slice of tomato and top all with a ring of green pepper. Place in a baking dish, season with salt and pepper and add hot water until the chop is nearly, but not quite, covered. Cover the dish and bake for about an hour in a slow oven.

New Roast Lamb.

Here is another way of serving roast lamb. The requirements are 4 lamb chops, 2 to 2 1/2 inches thick, 4 slices of bacon, flour, salt and pepper. Have the chops trimmed and boned at the market. Have them rolled and wound with a slice of bacon fastened with small skewers. Rub with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Place them on a rack in a small, open roasting pan. To brown them have the oven very hot for the first 10 minutes (500 degrees F.). Reduce the temperature to 300 degrees F. for the rest of the time. About 30 or 40 minutes in all will be required for the roasting.

There's the feel of Indian summer in the air! The Marketer yearns for the far away places, where she can scuffle through the bright-tinted leaves on the floor of the forest and watch the clouds, white and soft as cotton, float across a clean, blue sky. The Marketer doesn't want to spend these lovely days over a hot cooking stove and she doesn't want you to, either.

So get your week-end shopping done early and travel!

Sunday's dessert can be made Saturday and put in the icebox until ready to serve. Saturday's menu will require little preparation.

Dried beef for creaming is only 15 cents a pound. One-third pound will serve four, so the meat cost collapses. A rib roast of beef will cost 17 cents a pound, 6 pounds will serve three meals, allowing one-half pound per meal per person. The meat cost each meal will, therefore, be 34 cents.

Lettuce at a northeast market sells at 15 cents for three heads. Celery, two stalks for 15 cents, cucumbers, two for 5 cents.

At the same market you can buy spinach 2 pounds for 15 cents, potatoes 8 pounds for a quarter, tomatoes 10 cents a pound, broccoli, 15 cents a bunch.

Grapefruit takes the most astonishing nose-dive! The Marketer saw some priced at eight for 25 cents. Lemons are 8 cents a dozen, Italian fresh prunes (the Marketer thought they were plums, but the market man said no) are 4 pounds for 25 cents.

Cauliflower, in a Variety of Dishes,
Makes a Tasty Addition to Menu

By Ann Barrett.

Perhaps it is cauliflower's most popular role to rest coyly beneath a covering of good cream sauce or Hollandaise. (Screen Star Phillips Holmes seems to think so.) But variety is the spice of eating. So I'm going to point out three other favorite ways to enjoy this vegetable: 'Au gratin' (in individual "eared" dishes as pictured), in a supper soup with tiny dumplings, and in a delicious pudding that's a meal almost in itself.

Let me caution you against cooking cauliflower too soft for any of these dishes except the soup (for which it is put through a sieve). Generally speaking, cauliflower shouldn't be cooked a minute past the time when it's tender. It should be cooked in boiling water, of course, (or steamed), either plucked apart into flowerets or left whole. Unless the head is very hard and firm, you'd better take the extra precaution of soaking it in salted, cold water 30 minutes before cooking (to coax out possible tenants).

Cauliflower Au Gratin.
Now to get back to the recipes, here's how to proceed for cauliflower au gratin. Separate a small head of cauliflower (about 1 1/2 pounds) into flowerets and cook just till tender. Then sprinkle with about 1/4 teaspoon salt, put into individual baking dishes, and pour over a sauce made like this: Melt 2 tablespoons butter, blend in 2 tablespoons flour, slowly stir in 1 cup milk and cook smooth. Then add 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1/4 teaspoon pepper. Next, sprinkle cauliflower with 1/4 cup grated cheese and 1/2 cup fine, dry crumbs mixed with 2 tablespoons butter. Bake in 400-F. oven till brown.

For this delicious soup, cook one smooth. Pour batter over fruit, bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 35 minutes; test with cake tester. Loosen the cake from the sides of the pan with a spatula; invert on a large serving plate. Serve hot, with or without whipped cream.

Hunter's Horn
Calls Hounds
To Fox's TrailSportsmen of Maryland
Ride Over Woodlands of St. Mary's.

Leonardtown, Md., Nov. 3 (Spl.). The members of the Bushwood Hunt Club, one of the oldest in the United States, and probably the oldest in Maryland, have begun their season and captured several gray foxes.

The unseasonably warm weather of the past two weeks has been hard on the dogs, and the crops are still in the fields. But the hunters are looking forward eagerly to cold, frosty mornings, when the baying of the hounds and the master's horn will be heard over the woodlands and fields of old St. Mary's.

The Bushwood Club, whose members are descendants of devotees of the sport from Maryland's colonial days, boasts a pack of thoroughbred English hounds. Their master is Edmund Plowden, Jr., of Bushwood. His father, Capt. Edmund Plowden, widely known throughout the State, although 78, still rides to the hounds on occasion.

Most of the hunting is done around Chapico and the upper part of St. Mary's, along the Wicomico, in Charles County, which adjoins St. Mary's and borders the Potomac River.

The land throughout this section of Southern Maryland is level and the farms still use the old-fashioned rail fences, which are less dangerous to horses and hounds.

Gray foxes are plentiful this year. It is the boast of the Bushwood Club they have never held a drag hunt, considering it beneath the dignity of a thoroughbred hunter and an insult to his dogs.

Another group of hunters, known as the Mechanicsville Hunt Club, of which Zack Graves is the master of hounds, have already captured three red foxes. These foxes were found in the Mechanicsville section over near the Patuxent River, and are rather rare in these parts.

It is an old custom in southern Maryland that young and old participate in the hunts, and breakfasts after the hunts, held at the various old manors.

Needlework Guild Meets.
Bristol, Va., Nov. 3 (Spl.). Preliminary plans for Bristol's part in the national membership week of the Needlework Guild of America were made yesterday by the local committee.

The annual "lingering" will be held November 7, and on November 8 the clothing thus secured will be exhibited to the public and the annual meeting of the guild held. Col. David Townsend, superintendent of Kings Mountain Memorial Hospital, will be guest speaker.

The Needlework Guild of America is officially affiliated with the American Red Cross and cooperates with it in local and national relief work. The Bristol branch works in cooperation with the local Red Cross Chapter and dispenses through the Welfare Council, Salvation Army and Day Nursery.

With the cool weather, Washington housewives are learning anew the food value in meat items in family diets. The recipe is as follows:

Quick Beef Pie.
2 cups cold cooked beef, cut small pieces.
4 cups cold, cooked potatoes in small blocks.
1 cup cold, cooked vegetables, such as peas, carrots, onions.
1 cup stock, 1 teaspoon butter.
2 teaspoons flour, salt, pepper.
1/4 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce.
Pie crust, 1 can mushroom soup.
Mix and season beef and vegetables. Put in baking dish, pour over the stock, one cup boiling water, one teaspoon beef extract. Roll out pastry one-half inch thick, cover dish with it. Bake until brown, 375 degrees. Serve with mushroom sauce. Heat the mushroom soup. Add one-half cup each evaporated milk and water, two teaspoons browned flour, a teaspoon of butter. Cook 10 minutes. Add one teaspoon minced parsley.

The New Film Bills, and a Few Old Friends, as Seen by Yesterday's Reviewers

Broadway Life Is Basis of Film At Loew's Fox

Cotton Club Stage Revue; Chevalier at Earle; Other Programs.

"BROADWAY THROUGH A KEYHOLE." Twentieth Century picture of a night club, adapted to the screen by Gene Fowler and Graham Smith, featuring Charles Cummings, Russ Columbo, Blossom Seeley, Gregory Ratoff, Texas Guinan, Hugh O'Connell, Robert Coynne and C. Henry Gordon. Directed by Louis Sherman. Released Nov. 3, October 26.

Following a keenly satirical introductory sequence devoted to the good-natured debunking of Broadway and many of its false pretensions, this hectic fable of a night-club dancer, a gangster and a popular crooner gets at once into its major business of making a hero of a hoodlum and demonstrating that behind each cloud is a silver lining, under a mobster's silver shirt may beat a heart of gold and faint heart never won fair lady—or something to that general effect.

At times the story is as glib, as clever and as pungent as its authorship would lead one to expect. At other times it degenerates into mere carbon copy of a thousand—or is it a million?—other legends of the Gay White Way, which is neither so gay nor so white as once it was, that have unfolded the identical romance times without number, but not with benefit of such a typical Broadway group of celebrities as lend their names and their talents, such as they are, to "Broadway Through a Keyhole" rather authentic claim to realism.

Story Not Counterfeit.

A story of New York night life that boasts Tex Guinan as a central figure, and introduces many other familiar names, faces and night spots, can not be laughed at as completely uninteresting. "Broadway Through a Keyhole" becomes a little irksome only when it abandons its own exciting love story to sit on the sidelines in night clubs, speakeasies and flashy apartments while song-and-dance routines, from which the heroes are trotted out in the name of a Broadway reputation that is today more tradition than truth.

It is possible, as the developments of the plot proceed, to trace veiled allusions to the picture actually have gone through about what the film depicts, although one would hesitate to say that Mr. Johnson and his charming wife ever were meant, as was the implication of the fictitious at the fights in Los Angeles last summer.

Miss Cummings Featured.

The role of the night club dancer who captured the heart of a "big shot" along the main stem, only to lose her own to a crooner down at Miami Beach, is assumed by Charles Cummings, who was featured in the distance Cummings, whose routines are not all so sure-fire as to suggest that she is newly from the chorus. Her seriously romantic moments are by far her best. Blossom Seeley, the old war horse of Broadway, is assumed by Charles Cummings, who was featured in the distance Cummings, whose routines are not all so sure-fire as to suggest that she is newly from the chorus. Her seriously romantic moments are by far her best.

Among the male figures in the action, Paul Kelly, as Frank Rocco, the hard-boiled gangster with the soft heart, is best and shoulders above the rest, although Russ Columbo copes well enough with the difficulties of wooing Joan Whelan in active rivalry with a gentleman notoriously heavy with artillery during all his waking hours. Mr. Columbo deserves to be in the picture, but the things he does not do, rather than anything he does especially well.

For unerring comedy sense and a dialect that is a joy forever, Gregory Ratoff outranks all the others. Hugh O'Connell has his moments, but his best ones are in the spots where they are least needed. In moments of dramatic importance he seems particularly futile. Hobart Cavanaugh does rather better in a much smaller part, as C. Henry Gordon is superbly sinister as the toughest guy in the world, ready to put anybody on the spot, including his best friend and probably his mother, if the occasion should arise.

All-Colored Revue.

The stage portion of the Fox's current bill is given over entirely to the Cotton Club's "Stormy Weather Revue," a long and diversified succession of individual specialties and ensembles done in the familiar hot-cha Harlem manner, except that Mills Blue Rhythm Band is rather better than most septa orchestras and Adelaide Hall and George Dewey Washington lend the goings-on more than usual distinction. This is true also of Horace Stewart, a "laxbones" comic, who brings the revue's number of authentic artists, capable of carrying any show, to three.

Miss Hall figures first in the "Stormy Weather" number that has been elaborated into a spectacle of considerable dramatic worth, introducing as it does the Cecil Mack Choir of mixed voices and effective scenic treatment. George Dewey Washington joins in this elaborated lament and then both he and Miss Hall have their own individual moments that are the highlights of the entire entertainment.

Among others who contribute generously are the Three Little Pigs, the Four Flash Devils, Roy Atkins and "Little Bits." Cora Le Redd and the line girls.

Prof. Lampkin's "Madam Butterfly" overture, by Puccini, and the Fox Movietone News complete a racy, New York's two or three hours of lively diversion.

"THE WAY TO LOVE." Paramount's picture of a story by Benjamin Glazer and Gene Fowler, starring Maurice Chevalier, directed by Alexander Hall. Released Nov. 3, October 26.

This particular "way" is up hill, then down dale and far afield, turning aside from the most attractive vistas, but even if it never seems to know where it's going, it never gets there, it has Chevalier and

Five of the Five Hundred in the "Parade"

Just a suggestion of the wealth of feminine loveliness that adds an eye-filling flip to the later scenes of spectacular beauty that stamp "Footlight Parade" one of the most remarkable camera achievements in the history of the cinema. route. Which is all this reviewer needs for fun and enthusiasm.

The picture really is a very feeble, silly business, all about Francois, a second Chicago, though unlike the hero of "Seventh Heaven," who dreamed of getting the hose, this one wants to be a Paris guide. There's the girl—a very solemn one—she rescues from a brutal knife-thruster; a dog he rescues from a pursuing gangster; another girl who goes into mild fits at the mention of the word "marrage"; a Professor Bibb, who works miracles in love troubles; a game of checkers, played with wine-glasses (full ones), and a tie-cutting-off spree all over gay Paree.

Now all of these affairs are so delightfully mad that put together with any consistent insanity, "The Way to Love" should have been a most disarming fable. Unfortunately, some very old, stodgy and somewhat less than inspired moments and ideas clutter it up and numerous close-ups of the sad Miss Dvorak (singing very nicely for the runaway Miss Sylvia Sydney) slow and mix it into something very near a hodge-podge, more earthy than soaringly fantastic.

But—and a big "but"—it is full of fun, nevertheless. As we mentioned, here is Chevalier, and where Chevalier is, we like to be. His bubbling enthusiasm, his charming unselfconsciousness, his better than very good acting, and his own straw-hat-slinging are all here in Francois, who wants only "a one-room flat, a two-pants suit and three square meals a day."

We feel a little ungrateful asking for more, but we did want to see him working at his guiding and we think he deserves better material, not because he doesn't do wonders with what he has, but because he could do so much more with better. We're very glad that next time he's going to have something as nice, familiar and reliable as "The Merry Widow."

Edward Everett Horton, with his sly comedy, is very welcome. Francois' dog, Casanova, is a world wonder, and Arthur Pierson makes a good "Joe from Baltimore," a resident of the garage-top colony where Francois lives.

Miss Audrey Sieber, the Earle's new mistress of ceremonies, has a very nice stage bill to introduce and some luscious gowns—white satin, deep rose-red satin, black velvet, &c., and yum-yum—to introduce it in. She is a very pretty ceremonies supervisor, who, in her inaugural week, contended herself with brief announcements.

The Eno Japanese troupe presents a new and highly entertaining balancing act before a colorful Oriental curtain. The Rollickers quartet, of radio fame, score a decided and encores hit with splendid harmonizing—that voice being far beyond anything the tenor not far behind.

The Russian reveals, music, dancing and a surprising gold statue lady, who must spend more time "dressing" for her act than even Miss Quick Change Sieber, are excellent, but not quite Russian enough for us, for we note on leaping and capering.

Solly Ward in a little skit completes the stage portion of the bill. There is also a short movie featuring Rubinfeld and his lovely, rich violin; a pleasant rendering of that old favorite overture, "Carmen," by Freddie Clark and his men, and a newsreel.

RKO-Keith's

"THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII." Twentieth Century picture of the story "The Private Life of Henry VIII," starring Charles Laughton, Robert Coynne, and Charles Cummings. Directed by Alexander Hall. Released Nov. 3, October 26.

Somewhere between the Hamlet extinction of being a "bloody, bawdy villain; treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain" and the rather kindly (though given to raucous outbursts at times) king, fated to dwell in the misery of five unhappy marriages, the true private life of Henry VIII really lies.

Yel as United Artists has released this London Film dramatization, it is a much more believable story than the one history usually tells. Without condoning some of the exigencies Henry caused to arise, "The Private Life of Henry VIII" mirrors the mid-sixteenth century as few, if any, pictures have done.

Save for Charles Laughton, as Henry, the cast is little known to American motion-picture goers, but it is a cast, nevertheless, that is more than admirably suited to the roles involved. Disregarding Catherine of Aragon, wife number one, as not having any particular bearing upon the subsequent marital misadventures, the other wives are played by Merle Oberon, as the beheaded Anne Boleyn; Wendy Barrie, as Jane Seymour, who died almost in childbirth; Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Charles Laughton), as Ann of Cleves, who agreed to a divorce the first night; Blinnie Barnes, as Katherine Howard, beheaded for infidelity; and, finally, Evelyn Parr, as Katherine Parr, "the worst but the best" of them all.

Good as these charming ladies are, it is the character of King Henry and the ability of Charles Laughton to bring life, realism and continuity to the whole that makes the picture not merely another "costume drama," but a vivid, unforgettable glimpse into a past the best of which could scarcely equal the worst of today.

Mr. Laughton does not play King Henry—Mr. Laughton is, for the time being, none other than Henry himself.

Complementing the feature, which will close its run on Tuesday night, are a release of the screen version of "The Washington Post's" popular "Strange As It Seems," by John Hix; an amusing Sherlock Holmes parody; an Astor Fable, called "The Nut Factory," and an issue of the Pathe News.

Palace

"I'M NO ANGEL." Paramount picture of a story by R. C. Marston, starring Mae West, with Cora Le Redd, Robert Coynne, and Charles Cummings. Directed by Alexander Hall. Released Nov. 3, October 26.

Like a torrid Gibson girl, suddenly transplanted to these tempestuous thirties, Mae West cavorts in "I'm No Angel" for another week. Creating little short of a National furor with "She Done Him Wrong," Author-Actress West carries on. Why, no one seems to know—and can't—less whether it be the apotheosis of vulgarity, as some have claimed, the productions of Mae West are unique in the annals of the cinema. But whatever it is, she has something that no one else has.

Though inferior to her earlier work, as far as strict cinematography is concerned, much the same outline is followed in "I'm No Angel" with the locale as the principal element that is varied.

At present, Mae West needs no special story to carry one of her pictures—it is she herself that is the drawing card. But, for those who are not apprised of the facts, let it be said that the story revolves around Tira's head-in-the-lion's-mouth stunt and how, through it, she makes the big time, with fame, fortune and rich admirers. No question about it, Tira has it (as well as these, them and those), and it is small wonder that her extra-professional tastes should keep pace with her advancement in billing. But Tira finally falls for her "dark and handsome," in spite of his being the most wealthy of all her boy friends.

Such is the vehicle Miss West has drawn for herself. Headed by Cary Grant as the successful suitor, the roster of supporting players includes Edward Arnold, Ralf Harlowe, Russell Hopton, Gertrude Michael, Kent Taylor, Dorothy Peterson, Gregory Ratoff, Gertrude Howard, William Davidson, Nat Pendleton and Walter Walker.

The subsidiary attractions include "Rhapsody in Brew," a musical built around beer gardens, and a release of the Metrophone News.

Columbia

"THE BOWERY." Twentieth Century picture of the story "The Bowery," starring Charles Laughton, Robert Coynne, and Charles Cummings. Directed by Alexander Hall. Released Nov. 3, October 26.

It would seem that some one had rewritten the old song "We Won't Go There Any More"—at least it no longer has any significance with regard to "The Bowery," for back pop Chuck Connors, Steve Brody and their cohorts to gambol on for another spell on the main stem.

This return engagement of "The Bowery" is not only a tribute to entertainment of the first rank but to the esteem in which three actors, worthy of stardom, are held.

Wallace Beery, as Chuck Connors, and George Raft, as the immortal Steve Brody, dominate the film with their fights, verbal and fistful. Between the two there comes Jackie Cooper, as the hero-worshipping Swipes, and Fay Wray, as Lucy, befriended by Connors. Complications are added when Trislie (Pett Kellon), John L. Sullivan (George Walsh), and Tammany Young, played by himself, come of the scene. Ultimately, everything is smoothed out.

Inseparable now have become "The Bowery" and Walt Disney's "Three Little Pigs," a short which, on any other program, would seriously threaten a feature picture's claim to supremacy. Popular at first, and becoming increasingly so, the pigs and the big, bad wolf represent the acme of cinematic cartooning.

Also in Technicolor is "Hello, Pop," a revuelet with Ted Healy and his stooges furnishing such moments there are. A release of the Paramount News rounds out the program.

Charges Graft

Seeks Lien as Claims Rise in Piney Branch Underpass Job.

Twenty-eight instances of alleged graft and other illegalities, involving $12,123, in the Piney Branch underpass construction are charged in a petition filed yesterday in District Supreme Court by Edward C. Zink, Baltimore, former employee.

Zink asked intervention in a suit filed by the Globe and Mail Co., which is attempting to settle claims arising from the contractor's failure to complete the contract. Zink has claims for $2,580 for personal injuries. He seeks a lien of $2,925, which, he said, had been set aside to pay such claims. The indemnity company had bonded the contractor for $20,000 to pay labor and material charges, but the court was asked to adjudicate the claims, as they totaled $39,000.

In his petition Zink declared expense accounts were padded, charges made for materials never furnished and some claims were filed on fictitious grounds while the job was under construction.

Opera Star En Route To Sing at D. C. Rally

Miss Grace Moore, operatic and screen star, left Los Angeles last night on her way to Washington to sing at a mass meeting to be held by the Woman's Crusade at Constitution Hall, Thursday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be the principal speaker.

In the wire announcing her departure, Miss Moore said she has obtained special permission to sing the aria from "Madame Butterfly" as one of the group of songs on her program. Miss Moore is donating her services.

No Turns!

Pedestrians Help Enforce Rule at 13th and F.

Pedestrians have taken it upon themselves to see that the "no turn" rule at Thirteenth and F streets northwest is enforced, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer said yesterday.

Watching traffic at the intersection yesterday, Mr. Van Duzer said several motorists had "bawled out" motorists who failed to comply with the new rule.

Traffic tickets will be issued for violation after motorists have had a chance to familiarize themselves with the change, Mr. Van Duzer said.

Concert Turns Into Ovation To Schoenberg

Noted Composer, Here to Make Home in America, Hears Works Played.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

America's first public welcome to Dr. Arnold Schoenberg, who disembarked at New York a few days ago to make his home in the United States, was extended fittingly in the Nation's Capital last evening by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation at a concert of his compositions in the chamber music auditorium of the Library of Congress.

Dr. Engel, chief of the music division, presented the distinguished composer. Dr. Schoenberg was greeted with a standing salvo of applause.

The program contained two of Dr. Schoenberg's works, the "Verklarte Nacht" sextet for strings, and the second string quartet, Opus 10, with a soprano voice in the third and fourth movements. The former was played by the Kroll Sextet, of New York—William Kroll, Nicolai Berzovsky, Leon Barzin, David Sackson, Milton Prinz and Ossip Giskin.

In the second work, the Pro Arte Quartet of Brussels (Alphonse Onnou, Laurent Halleux, Germain Prevost and Robert Maas) had the assistance of Olga Averino.

During the years that have passed since the musical world first heard the "Verklarte Nacht," about the beginning of the present century, the art of harmony has undergone such transformations that this composition no longer startles anyone with its innovations. Passages which once seemed strange and puzzling are now scarcely perceived as integral threads in the fabric.

Not so long ago a center of controversy, the work has now become a classic—a position which it merits by every test of theory and aesthetics.

Inspired by that haunting poem by Richard Dehmel, "Zwei Menschen," the sextet is one of the loveliest colloquies in the literature of chamber music. Fraught with the brooding mystery of night, and with the stormy conflicts of human emotion that die away in the peace of understanding, it is a tissue of harmonic beauty.

When he wrote the second string quartet in 1907-1908, Dr. Schoenberg had developed his harmonic scheme, pushing forward boldly toward the undiscovered realms that his logic told him must exist. In it he noted the widening of harmonic intervals with which the composer foreshadowed a quarter of a century ago the contemporary astronomer's hypothesis of an expanding universe.

Here there are problems for the ear to resolve, and the inherent beauty of the music is more elusive and intangible. Although that beauty ever tantalizes us with half-seen glimpses, we know that it is there and that we will some day behold it fully disclosed.

The performance, which the participants in the concert gave to these exacting works it suffices to say that it had that polish of perfection which words of comment can only mar. Dr. Schoenberg expressed his delight by going upon the stage to thank the musicians.

Sentinel's Plan Luncheon.

Following a business session, the National Sentinels will give a luncheon today at 12:30 at the Women's University Club. Mrs. Henry W. Peabody will speak. Mrs. Jesse W. Nicholson will preside.

George Washington 6-to-5 Favorite Over Tennessee Eleven Today Central Rallies to Hand Tech Its First Defeat in Six Years, 7-0

Drives Over Touchdown

of Close Struggle.

MCKINLEY TECH's high school football dynasty toppled yesterday before the determined bid of a Central team that inflicted the first defeat suffered by the Manual Trainers in six years of play in the scholastic series. Eight thousand fans at Central Stadium saw Tech's unbeaten record and its championship hopes fall by a 7-0 score in a battle that saw the winning touchdown scored in the last five minutes of play.

Central thus advances to the top of the series standing, the only team to beat a Tech eleven in the series since the Central team of 1927 turned the trick. Series laurels will be definitely determined next Friday when Tech meets Eastern, which held Central to a tie.

Kocsis Is Hero

Frank Kocsis, the 175-pound Central bludgeon, who was completely bottled up by the Tech defense in the first half, powerhoused his way down the center of the field, practically single handedly and scored the winning touchdown on a 3-yard plunge with a pair of Manual Trainers draped about his neck as he crossed the goal line.

Central had gained possession of the ball on its own 30-yard stripe. Kocsis ripped through the center of the line to the 14 for a first down, Bryant, substitute for Richardson, squirmed 12 yards to the 4-yard mark; King added another yard and then on a sharp, light tackle thrust, Kocsis took the ball across the goal.

Prior to the short-touchdown march, an offside penalty cheated Central of a touchdown. The penalty followed the first sustained march of the fray and occurred late in the third period, when the bottled-up Kocsis defense began to crack. Don Dunlop, Central safety, advanced a Tech punt to his own 31. Kocsis smashed center for 12 and a first down. He dove through left tackle across the 50-yard line to the Tech 44 for a second, first down, and cracked through to the 28 for a third first down.

On the next play, with Kocsis lugging the ball, Tech was penalized 15 yards for holding, which brought the ball in play on the 22-yard line. King took up the ball-carrying burden and hit tackle for 2, and Kocsis then took the ball to the 7. The hard-fighting Tech line held for the next two downs and Central relinquished the ball.

Punt Is Blocked

In an attempt to kick out of danger, Delisio, Central's right end, broke up the punt and fell on the dribbling ball over the Tech line, but Central was off-side and was penalized 5 yards on the play. A moment later McKinley booted out of danger.

It was the return of the latter punt that led to the steady march that sent Kocsis over with the winning touchdown.

Tech had a shade the better of the battle in the first period, scrimmaging the ball in Central territory throughout the first stanza. Holmes Heatwole, diminutive Tech half back, and Paul Lynch ran through the Central line almost at will. These two Tech backs, with an occasional stab by Alley, full back, carried the ball to the Central 12 and then Lynch kicked out of bounds.

The heavier Central team rallied in the second quarter, Dunlop and King carrying the ball to the Trainer 15-yard line. A short time later, Lynch, of Tech, reeled off the longest run of the melee galloping around the right side of the line, close to the sidelines, for 45 yards to the Central 33-yard line. Heatwole and Pisan, Tech quarter, alternated in smashing the Central 21, but the Mount Pleasant forward wall functioned in fine style and finally took the ball on downs on its own 18.

Tech chose the air at the start of the second half and worked the ball to the Central 22. Vito Pisan hurled a pass to Bill Colner, Tech left end, but Dunlop of Central intercepted it on the Central 9, and advanced to his own 25-yard line. Then the first sustained march down the field by Central began.

Central accounted for 12 first downs to Tech's five, all of which were made in the first half.

Cant Remember Leads All Way to Win Maryland's Own at Pimlico by a Length

Pays $10.80; D reel Runs Second

Small Crowd Watches Captain Argo Take Opening Race.

Canandaigua, Ridden by McKinney, Victorious in Steeplechase.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)
PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 3. Favorite players scratched their heads as Cant Remember posted down the stretch here today to win the Maryland's Own, a 6-furlong dash for horses that were born in the land of Lord Calvert and Lord Baltimore. Many of those who did not ask for ticket No. 1 in the totalisator remembered that Cant Remember ran a rather ordinary race at Laurel last week.

Today's effort was a pip, however. Trainer P. E. Fitzgerald, affectionately called "Lying Fitz" by his friends, never sent a better conditioned horse to the post, and it was doubtful if one P. Dougherty ever turned in a better exhibition of finding the shortest way to the wire.

D reel is Second.
Cant Remember, owned by Frank Hayes, was a length ahead at the pay-off station, with D reel, the favorite, in front of Greylade, of the Labrot entry, by another length. The "lie-ing" was at the rate of $10.80 to $2.

The son of Canter and Memoria must have been standing on a spring, for he shot out of the stall gate and was a length in front before the echo of the starting bell had died away. It was catch me if you can from that point to the wire. D reel and Greylade, urged by Benjak and Gilbert, tried to turn the trick, but Cant Remember was pulling away at the end.

The crowd, divided into merry-go-round proportions with no Winoka and no Chase Me on the program.

Captain Argo Wins.
Captain Argo was in command of the field that contested in the 2-furlong dash, leading most of the 6 furlongs to finish 3 lengths in front of Flying Song, which, in turn, had a length on Sainted. Captain Argo was the favorite and paid $6.20.

Earl Porter and Miss Careful teamed to score an easy victory in the second race. The Chance Play filly hopped out at the start and was never headed, to give the favorite players two winners in a row. Her margin was three lengths over Royal Guard. Kindakorn was third. Royal Guard chased the winner for the entire trip. The mutual was $5.20.

Canandaigua Victor.

Regan McKinney, the gentleman rider, rode a confident and winning race on the favored Canandaigua in the Hartford Steeplechase. He had Tommy Hitchcock's horse under a tight grip for the first swing of the course, while Indicator and Arc Light battled for the doubtful honor of pace setting. McKinney let out a few notches going to the ninth jump, took the lead at the far turn and pulled away, as Arc Light threatened in the final run for the wire. Benedictine bobbed into the third money. Even money was paid on the winner. Two riders took nasty falls, but escaped serious injury.

Ridden by the unfashionable R. Merritt, the Horatio Sibley, Kate showed the way to a fair group of sprinters as the spell of the favorite players ended. Kate followed Golden Fate until the latter faded and then went on to win by a length and a half over Strill Along and Acataway, a public choice that was away from the bank on Contraband with a $31.50 "toie."

Six to Race Today For $25,000 Stake

Lanonia, Ky., Nov. 3 (P).—Six of the Nation's leading 3-year-olds were named today for the $25,000 added Lanonia championship. Of the six, Technique, of the stable of Hal Price Headley, was the sole Western nominee, competing against such leading horses as Caesar's Ghost, of the Brookmeade Stable; Contraband, choice of C. V. Whitney; Pomposity, of the stable of W. R. Coe, and Sun Archer and Dark Winter, coupled as the Willis Sharpe Kilmer entry.

Established in 1919, the stake, for 3-year-olds, at 1 1/4 miles will be run no more after this year.

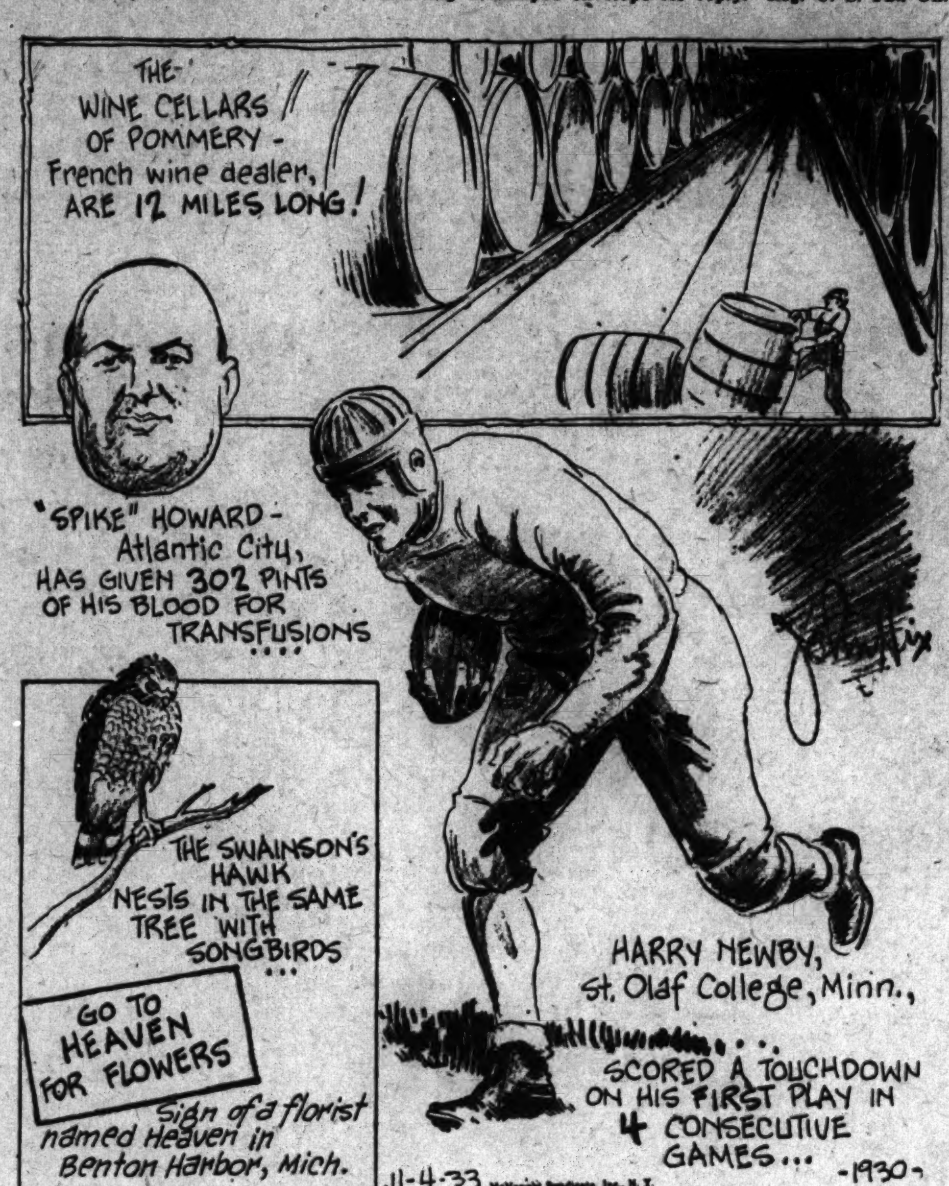

Pomposity will be Coe's hope to win again the stake he took with Cleopatra in 1920, while the Whitney Stable will be banking on Contraband to make it the leading money winner of the year.

Walt Mason, Himself

Horse And Buggy.
Now and then we find surviving some old-fashioned, simple jay; through the village he goes driving his old Dobbin, rusty gray. And he spends long hours explaining why a horse is better far, be the weather fair or raining, than the finest motor car. He is sorry for the voter with a mania for speed, who's content to tool a motor when he might possess a steed. He can give a hundred reasons why a charger is the best, though his neighbors, in all seasons, think old Dobbin is a pest. People hand out language graphic seeing Dobbin in the way, for he tangles up the traffic 47 times a day. He is slower than molasses with such load as he can draw, and the motorist who passes says there ought to be a law. He will block things at a crossing till the whole blamed town is sore, and the traffic cop who's bossing throws three fits, and sometimes four. And the driver hears the voters as they paw around and bawl, and he blames it on the motors—Dobbin's innocent of all. Men who cling to things out-moded never know a change of view; their anathema is loaded on whatever may be new.

Police Storm De Luxe Club, Seize Liquor

"Zebbie" Goldsmith Held as "Mayflower Club" Is Dismantled.

A dozen policemen of the headquarters raiding squad rang down the curtain on Washington's swankiest speakeasy, the Mayflower Club, yesterday afternoon.

When the squad had left with its two prisoners, confiscated liquors ranging from gin to cointreau, bar and barred doors, the fourth floor of 1223 Connecticut avenue was as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard.

Before the police arrived the place would have brought joy to any connoisseur, with its 30-foot bar and giant mirror, its lights shaded in the Halloween motif and its two dozen yellow-clothed tables.

Entrance Is Easy.

The police did not have to batter down the reinforced doors. One of their colleagues had gained access and he opened up for the rest.

"Zebbie" Goldsmith, who police said was the proprietor, and Robert Williams, a colored porter, were arrested on liquor and gaming charges. Goldsmith later was released on $1,500 bond.

The "Club Mayflower" enjoyed the patronage of the young social set of the city, according to police. Gaming equipment, a slot machine and a chuck-a-luck table were seized by police, as well as the de luxe drinking equipment.

Part of Clean-up.

The raid was a continuance of the police drive to close the city's many speakeasies, ordered by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

Brightly-colored caricatures covered the walls of the establishment. One depicted Paul Whiteman presiding over a little musical group. Ghandi at the piano, Kate Smith on the piano, Bernard Shaw tooting a clarinet and Rudy Vallee with the saxophone.

Of liquor seized there was about 50 quarts, Scotch, rye, gin, cognac, wines and champagne. The policemen also took several cases of 3.2 beer.

The raiding party was headed by Lieutenants George S. Little and N. O. Holmes.

During the summer the Mayflower Club was raided by police, but no evidence was found. Charges against the proprietor were dismissed in Police Court.

Goldsmith was held up and robbed this week of $500 in an elevator in the exclusive Woodley Park Towers, where he resides.

Seeks Prison for Ahearn.

Prosecution of Jack Ahearn as a persistent violator of the Volstead act is planned by Assistant District Attorney David Hart, he announced yesterday.

Hart said he would endeavor to have Ahearn indicted before the District grand jury as a violator of the Jones law, which carries the provision that persistent liquor law violators be imprisoned for 10 years.

Ahearn's Club Champlain, at 817 Thirteenth street northwest, was raided Thursday. He and two employees were scheduled to appear in Police Court yesterday for arraignment, but the case was continued until next week when Ahearn's attorney announced his client was ill.

Settlement Holds Open House Today

Novel Scheme of Charging Set for Anniversary.

One cent for each year of its existence, or a total of 32 cents, is the price set for lunch, supper, cards, bingo, handmade articles and the like at the thirty-second anniversary celebration of Neighborhood House, at the settlement, 470 N street southwest, today. Open house will be from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m.

The cost plan was worked out by members of the adults club and approved by Mrs. Merle Thorpe, chairman of the finance committee. Visitors will be welcomed by staff members and officers, including Miss Ellen A. Vinton, honorary president; Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, president; Mrs. John Jay O'Connor, first vice president; Mrs. Porter H. Dale, second vice president; Mrs. Frank Conger, third vice president; George E. Fleming, treasurer; Irving Zippel, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Clara D. Neill, secretary; Mrs. Thorpe and Mrs. Wilson Compton, house committee chairman.

Bandit Who Got $4,000 Given 3-Year Term

Sentence of three to seven years in prison was passed on Maurice Shelton in District Supreme Court yesterday, following his plea of guilty to a charge of robbery. Murray Ziegler, indicted with Shelton, will be sentenced next week.

Both men admitted they robbed Morris J. Morrison, manager of the G. C. Murphy store, of $4,000 last September. Morrison lost the money in a daylight robbery at Fifteenth street and New York avenue northwest.

Suit Demands $25,000 In Death of Woman

Suit for $25,000, resulting from the death of Anna S. Dotterer, was filed in District Supreme Court yesterday with Margaret C. Bush, 5415 Minnesota avenue southeast, named defendant.

Miss Dotterer, according to the suit, was a passenger in an automobile driven by the defendant last August in Maryland. The machine figured in an accident at Halethorpe, Md., and Miss Dotterer died of her injuries, the suit said. Attorney Alvin L. Newmyer represented Helen E. Shutz, who sued as the executrix of Miss Dotterer's estate.

Brown Plans To Alter Police Precinct Lines

Fourth to Be Reopened and First Drawn Closer to Business Area.

Establishment of the First Precinct Station in closer proximity to the downtown business area and reopening of the abandoned old Fourth Precinct Station are among several important aims of Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown.

This program-envisaging redesignation of the present First Precinct under its former title, the Sixth, would virtually upset the redistricting put through during the regime of Gen. Pelham D. Glassford.

Maj. Brown's ideas were revealed at a recent hearing on 1935 District estimates before the Budget Bureau.

Questioned about an item for $1,500 asked to restore the old Fourth Precinct on E street southwest, Maj. Brown was asked if he had any further plans.

The police head indicated his plans at that time and last night enlarged upon them.

"Business men having dealings with police complained they were inconvenienced by journeys to the present First Precinct Station on New Jersey avenue. Further, the Second Precinct—the city's most densely populated—is generally overwhelmed with activity."

Maj. Brown advocates a new First Precinct near the commodious new Fire Department headquarters at Thirteenth and K streets. He would run the north boundary line of this precinct well into the present Second Precinct lines to relieve that police branch.

The 1931 revamping, under Glassford, eliminated the old Fourth, Eighth and First Precincts and these numerical titles were so distributed as to eliminate the designations, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Precincts.

Used cards are requested. Boxes will be placed for their reception in Washington department stores. Each veterans' hospital in Washington annually uses more than 500 decks of cards, the association states.

Countess' Lawyer To Question May

Maret Surprise Witness Resumes Stand Monday.

Charles A. May, Government surprise witness in the trial of Countess Grace DeBenque and George Gormley, will be cross-examined Monday when the trial is resumed.

May, who testified he was paid $250 to stop up to an automobile on the Brookville (Md.) pike and ask, "Is the automobile broken down," had finished his direct examination when Justice Joseph W. Cox adjourned court.

Gormley and the countess are being tried on charges they stole approximately $5,000 from Miss Louise Maret, coproprietor of the Maret School, two years ago. Both deny their guilt.

New Trials Denied 2 in 'Frat' Fire

Motions for new trials for H. Albert Smith and Edward J. Parillon, convicted last week of arson in connection with the near-destruction of the Sigma Chi frat house at 1312 N street northwest, were denied yesterday by Justice Peyton Gordon, District Supreme Court.

Attorneys for the two former George Washington students claimed the evidence did not warrant conviction. They emphasized the "alibi" offered by the two in their trial. This was that both were many miles from this city when the fire broke out. Sentence was reserved until next week.

Court Upholds Officer Given Bank Closing Suspension by Proclamation District Heads

Ruling Comes Here in Suit Against Conservator to Recover Bonds.

Opinion that the proclamation of President Roosevelt of March 6 closing all banks was legal was uttered in District Supreme Court by Justice F. D. Letts.

The opinion came as a corollary to a suit by Daly Bros. Inc., against Thomas P. Hickman, conservator of the Franklin National Bank, seeking to recover $25,000 in Liberty bonds from the conservator.

Daly Bros. claimed giving the bank a certificate of deposit for more than $25,000 February 28 to be used in purchase of bonds, which were afterward actually purchased from Chase National Bank. The bonds were received by the bank the morning of March 13, and that evening the bank was placed in the hands of Hickman.

Suit was brought on the ground that the transaction was completed before the conservatorship. However, Justice Letts held that the bank was officially closed March 6 and the transaction could not be complete until the conservator had carried it through. Authority for the completion was lacking, he said, until the bank was operated by the conservator.

Justice Letts declared: "The Chase National Bank had no more authority to pay out money of the Franklin National Bank on March 13 than the Franklin National Bank had to expend its own funds (the bonds then being closed by proclamation). To hold otherwise would nullify the President's proclamation and defeat its obvious and lawful purpose."

The suit was dismissed.

2 Policemen Deny Extortion Charge

Policemen Harry G. Bauer and Rudolph Schlichter yesterday entered pleas of not guilty when arraigned in District Supreme Court on a charge of extortion.

They are charged with extorting $50 from Alfred Dudley, arrested by them on a liquor charge last week. Police officials, secreted in a moving van at Eighth and L streets northwest, arrested Bauer and Schlichter after they had allegedly seen an unopened envelope pass into their hands.

The envelope, it was charged, contained $50 in marked money. Both posted $500 bonds.

Boiler Plant Contract For Navy Yard Awarded

A $306,390 contract for installation of a boiler plant at the Washington Navy Yard was awarded yesterday to George W. Stetson, Jr., of Boston.

E. C. Becraft was awarded a contract for $3,776 to resurface the roads at the Naval Operating Base at Norfolk.

Mixed Up

Two Firemen Lost in Big New U. S. Building.

Two firemen lost their way in the new Postoffice Department Building last night. They went there to extinguish a small blaze, and after going up six stories in an elevator, then up two flights of stairs, and walking a long way, they were confused. Searchers found them.

District Milk Boost Urged By Producers

Senate Probers Informed Marketing Pact Perils Small Dealers.

Retail milk prices must be raised under the proposed marketing agreement for the Washington area or small independent distributors will be forced into bankruptcy, the Senate Milk Investigating Committee was told yesterday by John McGill, Jr., secretary of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association.

McGill said the increase of 3 cents per gallon for Class 1 and Class 2 milk, which is to be paid to the producers under the proposed pact, would eliminate the smaller dairies from competition because the larger dairies would be able to assimilate the increase.

Fear of the National Dairy Products Corporation, which controls 60 per cent of the milk distribution in the Capital, caused producers for the Baltimore and Washington areas to form the Eastern States Marketing Association, it was testified by I. W. Heaps, marketing agent for both milk sheds.

Reason Explained.

"The National Dairies was not cooperating with the farmers in Baltimore and we knew that if it came into Washington it would do the same thing, so we formed the Eastern States to protect ourselves," he said.

Heaps also told the committee that the late Samuel M. Shoemaker, former chairman of the board of regents of the University of Maryland, "had more to do with bringing Dr. King (Clyde L. King) into Washington than anyone else." Dr. King has been accused by independent dairies of having tried to "fix" prices in the District in 1929.

Edward H. Seal, special counsel to the committee, reminded the committee that Mr. Shoemaker was listed on the National Dairies stock list as the holder of 23,000 shares of common stock.

Every phase of the new 40-year age limit employment rule will be discussed Monday at a conference between Secretary Perkins and Civil Service Commission officials.

President Roosevelt requested Miss Perkins to study the situation after announcement of the regulation brought a storm of criticism from members of Congress and civic organizations. The Labor Secretary will draft recommendations for the White House.

The rule under 40 eligibility for examination as stenographers, typists and allied occupations. Commission officials contended the new age maximum was fixed because appointment officers in the department insisted on selecting young persons.

Miss Perkins has indicated she is not in sympathy with such policy. She believes many persons over 40 thus excluded would make valuable workers because of their experience and mature judgment.

Representative Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, original opponent of the commission action, considered the ban unfair. He wrote a letter of protest to President Roosevelt and enlisted support of several colleagues.

Others opposing the rule included Senators Copeland (Democrat), New York; Capper (Republican), Kansas; and Coudens (Republican), Michigan. The Board of Trade and the American Federation of Federal Employees announced they would fight the proposal. Support was voiced by Edgar C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees.

3 Missing Boys Hunted by Police

One Due From Baltimore Fails to Arrive.

Police last night were asked to search for three boys reported missing from their homes.

Richard Albino, 14, failed to arrive at his home, 1822 Massachusetts avenue northwest, after leaving St. Joseph's School in Baltimore.

Herbert Allen Judy, 8, was reported missing since noon from his home, 697 Ninth street southwest, and Philip Morehouse, 6, also was missing from his home, 1209 D street southeast, since 6 p. m.

The Albino boy, reported missing by his brother, Edward, was described as being 5 feet 10 inches tall, 138 pounds, blond hair and blue eyes, and wearing a blue serge suit and black shoes.

Bandit Holds Up Two And Loots Gas Station

Two attendants of the Minute Service Station, No. 7, 3899 Canal road, were held up last night and robbed of about $100 by a young colored man.

H. M. Shepp, of Laurel, Md., and John Tison, 3434 Brown street northwest, were in charge of the station when the armed man walked in. They told police the bandit fled aloft after rifling the cash register.

Inquest Set in Killing Of Man by Policemen

An inquest will be held today in the death of Fred Briggs, Negro, who was killed in a gun battle with two Second Precinct policemen on October 23.

Briggs, cornered in his room at 318 New York avenue northwest, after he had tried to hold up a cab driver, was shot by Policemen A. B. Clark and R. D. Chensault. Clark was wounded.

40-Year Limit In Civil Service Goes to Parley

Miss Perkins Will Discuss Proposed Rule With Board Officials.

Every phase of the new 40-year age limit employment rule will be discussed Monday at a conference between Secretary Perkins and Civil Service Commission officials.

President Roosevelt requested Miss Perkins to study the situation after announcement of the regulation brought a storm of criticism from members of Congress and civic organizations. The Labor Secretary will draft recommendations for the White House.

The rule under 40 eligibility for examination as stenographers, typists and allied occupations. Commission officials contended the new age maximum was fixed because appointment officers in the department insisted on selecting young persons.

Miss Perkins has indicated she is not in sympathy with such policy. She believes many persons over 40 thus excluded would make valuable workers because of their experience and mature judgment.

Representative Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, original opponent of the commission action, considered the ban unfair. He wrote a letter of protest to President Roosevelt and enlisted support of several colleagues.

Others opposing the rule included Senators Copeland (Democrat), New York; Capper (Republican), Kansas; and Coudens (Republican), Michigan. The Board of Trade and the American Federation of Federal Employees announced they would fight the proposal. Support was voiced by Edgar C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees.

2-Cent Increase In Gasoline Tax Here Proposed

Representative Smith of Virginia Cities Larger Levies Nearby.

Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), Virginia, a member of the House District Committee, will ask the House when Congress convenes to boost the District tax on gasoline from 2 to 4 cents a gallon, he announced last night.

Declaring District gasoline taxation "way out of line" with levies exacted in neighboring States, Smith said he will put in a bill for the dual purpose of ironing out this differential and relieving the District real estate tax burden.

He thinks real estate taxes in the District are too high, and that by doubling the gasoline revenues there could be a general scaling down of realty levies here.

Representative Mapes (Republican), Michigan, in the last Congress submitted a bill to double the District's gasoline revenues. A similar bill passed the House in the Seventy-second Congress, was scaled down to 3 cents in the Senate, and was blocked on the Senate floor by Senator Oddie (Republican), Nevada.

Three other Mapes bills, providing increased District income, estate and automobile weight taxes, also were pending in the House on adjournment.

Together with the Federal tax of 1 1/2 cents a gallon on gasoline, the Smith proposal would boost the local levy to 5 1/2 cents.

The District's present 2-cent gasoline tax compares with a 5-cent levy in Virginia, 4 cents in Maryland, 4 cents in West Virginia, 7 cents in Tennessee, 6 cents in New York and 5 cents in Kentucky, Smith pointed out.
